London Talks Cannot Yield Security Plan, Official Says

British Statement Made After France Issues New Ultimatum.

Recall of Soldiers In Rhine Stressed

Soviet Assails Reich as Hitler Agrees to Join Locarno Parley.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

London, March 17.—A high British authority said tonight "it is not conceivable" a lasting solution for European problems could be found at the present meeting of diplomatic representatives of Locarno Pact powers.

His statement came as Locarno representatives adjourned after another midnight session on the heels of a fresh French "ultimatum" and a Soviet blast against Adolf Hitler.

The diplomatic gloom, temporarily dissipated by Nazi acceptance to send delegates to the League of Nations Council session considering violation of the Locarno Treaty by German remilitarization of the Rhineland, deepened in the face of the British statement.

The diplomatic storm broke when Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet Russia's foreign commissar, bitterly assailed Hitler and said his substitute peace proposals were a "smoke-screen for aggression."

Calls for Legality.

Swiftly, Pierre-Etienne Flandin, France's towering foreign minister, issued a statement containing two demands which he said must be met before France would negotiate on [illegible] pact.

He demanded:

1. That the League officially register Germany's violation of the Locarno Treaty.

2. That Germany must submit her complaint against the newly ratified Franco-Soviet mutual defensive treaty to the Hague World Court, accept the Court's "inevitable" (as a French spokesman forecast it) decision, then withdraw the troops from the Rhineland.

"In other words," said a French spokesman, "Germany must restore legality before France will consider Hitler's proposals."

Hitler had given as his excuse for breaking the Locarno pact that the Franco-Soviet pact had been a violation of that treaty. France contends the Hague Court would hold otherwise.

Flandin's demands were given outside the League conference through a spokesman of the French delegation. They will not block German attendance at the Council, but forecast a delay in French participation of any new general European security negotiations.

Flandin Returns to Paris.

Flandin returned to Paris tonight to participate in chamber debates and his place here will be taken by Joseph Paul-Boncour, minister of state. German delegates will arrive by air from Berlin tomorrow to take seats at the Council table for the first time since the Reich angrily left the League in 1933.

These developments came only a few hours after Great Britain pledged to work as a mediator between France and Germany in trying to reach a new security framework for troubled Western Europe.

No sooner was Hitler's acceptance announced at St. James' Palace than Litvinoff assailed Hitler as a menace to the peace of Europe.

He pledged Russia's fullest support of whatever measures the council might take to punish the Reich as a violator of the Locarno Treaty and said Germany's peace proposals were but "a smoke-screen for aggression."

Before the council is a Franco-Belgian resolution branding Germany as a breaker of both the Lo-

Billion Relief Fund Sought By Roosevelt

Garner and Floor Chiefs Attend Final Drafting; Fight Predicted.

By Felix Bruner.

President Roosevelt will ask Congress in a special message today to appropriate more than $1,000,000,000 for works relief for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The President went over the final draft of his message with Congressional leaders and financial experts late yesterday. While no figure was announced, it was reported definitely that the total would be more than $1,000,000,000 and less than $2,000,000,000.

The money is expected to be asked for work relief projects similar to those being conducted by the Works Progress Administration. A blanket appropriation without specification of individual projects may be asked.

Higher Than Hoped.

The amount to be asked is higher than many members of Congress had hoped it would be. The report that the President would ask for a sum to tide the relief administration over until next January or February was dispelled.

The appropriation will be outside the regular budget.

Attending the conference were Vice President Garner, Senator Robinson, of Arkansas; Representative Bankhead, of Alabama; the Democratic floor leaders, Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, and Representative Buchanan (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the Appropriations Committee; Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee; Daniel Bell, acting budget director, and Corrington Gill, financial head of the Work Progress Administration.

Arrival of the relief message in Congress is expected to intensify the fight over relief measures and to bring about additional demands for an investigation. The temper of the Senate was indicated yesterday when it defeated an additional appropriation for the Florida ship canal, one of the largest projects undertaken under the relief program. The House previously had defeated a similar appropriation. The first allotment for the canal, $5,400,000, was made by President Roosevelt out of relief funds. It is estimated that if finished, the project would cost as much as $200,000,000.

No Specific Projects.

President Roosevelt revealed during his press conference preceding the relief meeting that appropriations would not be asked for specific projects. He added that the measure is expected to be national in scale and would make no specific provision for the present District of Columbia relief crisis.

The President also shattered the hopes of members of Congress who have been attempting to prevent reduction in the personnel and number of CCC camps. CCC, which is provided with a prospective appropriation of $246,000,000 in the budget, is expected to be reduced from an enrollment of 380,000 at present to 300,000.

The number of camps is expected to be reduced from 4,158 to 1,456. The schedule calls for a reduction of 455 April 1 and 247 July 1, a total of 702.

On the present basis of application, Mr. Roosevelt said, there will not be more than 300,000 men whose families are on relief available for enrollment in the camps. He said that the camps must be limited to prevent a break in the budget and that a line must be drawn between persons on relief and those who are merely unemployed. He pointed out the danger of favoritism and scheming if the door is opened to young men not on relief.

President Roosevelt said that many of the camps will be closed

Wirephoto: Heroic Rescue During Flood

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Nelson Campbell, 60 years old, swept from a bridge by flood waters at Mechanicsville, N. Y., was rescued by Allen Van Decar, a bus driver. Van Decar later fell into the raging waters, but both were aided by rescue parties hearing their calls for assistance.

Maryland Calls Troops; Families are Routed, Damage Heavy.

Plea for Aid Sent To Red Cross Here

Valley of Shenandoah Is Submerged; Virginia Area in Distress.

Cities were inundated, bridges swept away, highway and rail transportation paralyzed.

Troops assisted in rescue work at Cumberland.

Last-minute flood developments were:

Cumberland, Md.—Several thousand persons fled their homes as the Potomac flooded its banks and poured through the streets in 10-foot-deep streams. The National Guard was called out.

Altoona, Pa.—Boats were used to rescue marooned women and children.

Johnstown, Pa.—Waters equal to the historic 1889 flood, in which 2,000 were killed, surged through the city. Thousands took refuge on high ground as power houses and factories were submerged by the Conemaugh River.

Indiana, Pa.—Five persons were reported drowned when a dam burst.

Richmond, Va.—Dozens of roads were blocked by high water in Richmond and elsewhere in Virginia.

Pittsburgh.—Streets in Triangle area were flooded by the raging Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers, 5 feet above flood stage. The situation was regarded as critical.

Potomac On Rampage.

The Potomac River, swollen by three days of rain in the mountains, roared over its banks last night and flooded Cumberland, Md., with a 12-foot torrent of water.

The flood current was so strong that it carried automobiles with it as it swept through Cumberland's main street.

Thousands of persons in the Cumberland area fled from their homes to seek higher ground and at a late hour many were marooned in upper floors or on roofs, wet and hungry.

Two hotels, many stores and the police headquarters were evacuated as the waters rushed in on them.

Telephone and telegraph poles toppled and joined furniture, boxes and other debris in the maelstrom that swirled through the downtown section.

The Red Cross set up a refuge in the State Armory, but last night the flood waters also were invading that structure and plans were being made to move to St. Mary's Catholic Church, which is on higher ground.

Workers Trapped.

Hundreds of Cumberland office workers, the Associated Press reported, were huddled in upper floods of office buildings, unable to get to their homes.

Throughout the day torrential rain beat down on the city, and it was not until 10 p. m., that it slackened.

Thereafter, boats set out to rescue those marooned in the inundated buildings and homes. Earlier the boats could not buck the swift current.

No estimate of the damage in Cumberland could be made last night, but as businessmen surveyed broken windows and flooded stock

Phone Profits Aired as F.C.C. Starts Inquiry

A. T. & T. Continued Dividends, Slashed Wages, Says Federal Aid.

By Sidney Olson.

A stocky, aggressive young attorney, Samuel E. Becker, special counsel for the Federal Communications Commission, yesterday began to spin a closely woven legal web around the operations of the $5,000,000,000 American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the world's largest private business.

Becker, seeking to find out whether the A. T. & T. has evaded taxes, has attempted to influence legislation, has concealed profits from the Government, or failed to reduce telephone rates during depression years, developed during the day's inquiry the following points:

1. The telephone company, while maintaining dividends to stockholders during the past six depression years, reduced employment by 32 per cent and pay rolls by 26 per cent, while operating revenues dropped only 13 per cent, the number of telephone stations dropped only 10 per cent, and the average number of daily calls dropped but 8 per cent.

2. Attorneys for Western Electric Co., owned by A. T. & T. in rate cases, have repeatedly cited high rates of the Graybar Electric Co., supposedly a competitor, as comparative competitive rates which would not justify lower rates. Becker attempted to show that Graybar Electric Co. is entirely controlled by Western Electric Co., a holding company device.

Structure Outlined.

Becker, dapper in a chalk-striped oxford-gray suit, was polite, but merciless with the day's two witnesses, Walter S. Gifford, $208,000-per-year president of the A. T. & T. and Edgar S. Bloom, president of the Western Electric Co., which is 99.42 per cent owned by the telephone company.

Cutting short lengthy explanations of testimony from his prepared outline of questions, the FCC attorney, former counsel of the Wisconsin Public Service Commission, worked rapidly and intensively to outline for the record the complex ramifications of the structure of the A. T. & T. and its 23 associated companies.

Leigh Quits Race; 'Can't Beat' Glass

By the Associated Press.

Randolph Leigh, of McLean, Va., announced yesterday he had withdrawn from the senatorial race in Virginia because he had found "it impossible for me to defeat Senator Glass."

His announcement said:

Having completed a series of trips taking me into practically every county in Virginia, and having found that it will be impossible for me to defeat Senator Glass, or even come near so doing, I hereby announce the abandonment of my campaign for the Democratic senatorial nomination."

Senator Glass's only comment was that he had not commented upon Leigh's opposition, and therefore had nothing to say of his withdrawal.

Auto Accidents At Record Low Since January

By Howard F. Wentworth.

All-time records of the Department of Vehicles and Traffic have been shattered by daily drops in the number of personal injuries and major accidents since February 1; it was reported yesterday.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, expressing renewed hopes for the 1936 "safest city" award, attributed improved conditions to recent traffic educational drives and strict law enforcement. Encouraged by evident trends toward safety observance, Van Duzer declared:

"It is apparent on all sides that something is happening to the motoring public. There is more cooperation—more willingness to observe regulations. We are headed for a banner month if present records continue.

"Although our new system of permit suspension in speed cases has greatly aided street safety, I feel that newspaper co-operation has been a great benefit. The Post has done a fine thing to bring traffic matters to public attention in the manner of its recent series of stories."

Average Drops Steadily.

The daily average number of accidents dropped from 32 in December to 19 this month. On Saturday of last week, records showed only 16 accidents, Van Duzer declared. In January the average was 24 crashes each day and last month 21.

"This shows a steady drop day by day since December," Van Duzer said. "Last month brought the lowest number of personal injuries in four years. Deaths also have dropped accordingly. So far this month, we have 19. At this time last year it was 28."

Chimes Ring Sour at 7 A. M., Chevy Chase Group Protests

The sound of chimes, sweetly ringing the angelus, has sent poets and composers into lyrical ecstacy, as verse and hymns will show.

It must have been with some surprise, therefore that Assistant Corporation Counsel George D. Neilson, yesterday heard a committee of three ask that something be done about the chimes in the Shrine of the Most Blessed Sacrament, located near Chevy Chase Circle.

They sought legal action to prevent the ringing of the chimes at 7 o'clock every morning. With a fine disdain for poets and composers, the complaining citizens said it was bad enough to be awakened at 7 a. m., but worse to be awakened by chimes that "do not ring true."

They said this about chimes for which the proud communicants of Blessed Sacrament recently paid $11,000.

The men who called on Neilson to protest were Eugene Young, 6001 Western avenue; William H. Finckel, 3630 Western avenue, and Jere J. Crane, 5829 Chevy Chase Parkway.

Mr. Crane is superintendent in charge of business affairs of the Board of Education, and as such gets to work at 9 a. m., two hours after the chimes ring out.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Neilson could think of no police regulation covering chimes, so he fell back on persuasion. He instructed Capt. James E. Bowers, of the Eighth Precinct, to call on the Rev. Thomas G. Smythe, pastor of the church, and ask him to delay the ringing of the chimes each morning until 9.

Neilson told them that if Father Smythe did not agree this time, their only recourse would be to take their complaint into civil court.

Father Smythe, a ruddy-faced, jovial priest, showed little indication of obliging the upset trio.

"I don't mind their saying that the chimes get their goats," he said, "but I wil never forgive them for saying that the chimes are out of tune. Why, last month an expert was here from Chicago to inspect and tune the chimes."

Field Workers Are Mobilized By Red Cross

Entire Staff Reported Hurrying Aid From Maine to North Carolina.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 17.—The entire disaster relief staff of the National Red Cross was thrown into the field tonight for the first time since the Mississippi floods of 1927 and 1929, Edward H. Powers, one of the workers, reported tonight.

Calling by telephone from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., where he was stationed, Powers said he had been informed that workers were being dispatched to scattered points along the Atlantic seaboard from Maine to North Carolina.

Pennsylvania had some of the spots of greatest danger, he said he was informed, but the problems of saving lives and relieving distress from flood waters and a tornado in Virginia extended from Portland, Me., and near the Canadian border in Vermont to eastern North Carolina, where new rains threatened to send rivers out of control.

Workers at Wilkes-Barre were watching anxiously a river that threatened to rise to levels which a few days ago caused loss of four lives in that vicinity.

Miss Helen Moses, director of Red Cross relief in Pennsylvania, and W. W. Jefferson, jr., her assistant, who had been staying at Wilkes-Barre, departed for Johnstown tonight under orders from Washington.

Powers said word had come back that a washout on the Pennsylvania Railroad ten miles east of Johnstown had stopped the disaster workers, who then planned to finish their trip tomorrow by airplane.

Efforts were being made tonight to reach Johnstown by radio, other means of communication having failed.

In Buffalo, N. Y., a blizzard which began at 1 a. m. yesterday morning was still raging, bringing suffering and want. Eighteen inches of snow have fallen in the western New York region, Mrs. Dorothy Johnson, Red Cross representative, told headquarters.

Train Sent to Aid Of Stricken Town

New York, March 17 (AP).—The Pennsylvania Railroad announced tonight it had sent a train loaded with boats and flood equipment to Johnstown, Pa., from Pittsburgh.

A high water caused the cancellation of four scheduled trains between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh and the rerouting of many others.

The railroad reported East and West service on its main line "impossible." Trains for the West out of New York were routed over the Lehigh Valley and New York Central. Trains from here for St. Louis used Pennsylvania tracks to Washington, where they were shunted to the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Trains out of Washington were sent on Pennsylvania tracks to Elmira, N. Y., rerouted to the Erie as far as Mansfield, N. Y., and then shunted back to the Pennsylvania for New York.

Venizelos' Condition Reported 'Desperate'

Paris, (Wednesday), March 18 (AP).—The condition of Eleutherios Venizelos, former premier of Greece, was reported "desperate" early today.

Doctors said shortly after midnight he was sinking fast, a weakening heart complicating a relapse after a light touch of grip. His condition became worse four days ago.

Johnstown Engulfed, Scores Trapped by 20 Feet of Water

Second Disaster Feared as River Rises to Mark Set in 1889; Four Drowned When Dam Bursts at Nearby Rossiter; Pittsburgh in Danger.

By the Associated Press.

Johnstown, Pa., March 17.—Flood waters engulfed the City of Johnstown tonight, forcing its inhabitants to the highlands while the Conemaugh River spread destruction over the same ground where more than 2,000 persons drowned in the memorable flood of 1889.

The surging torrent lapped against the second stories of many downtown buildings.

Several hundred persons were marooned in the inundated business structures and rescuers in motorboats and rowboats sped the work of carrying them to safety.

The dead were Russell Saye, 35-year-old miner, his wife and two daughters.

Officers of the Clearfield Bituminous Coal Co., which operates the mines at Rossiter, said residents in the valley had been warned to move.

The breaking of the dam swept away the Saye home and several smaller structures.

The swirling waters hurled Kostic Oshenic, a visitor, through a window of Saye's home. He grabbed the limb of a tree and was pulled to safety by three unidentified youths.

Coroner John Woods of Indiana County, said bodies of Saye and one of his children were recovered. The others were swept down stream.

One man was known to have drowned tonight in the Johnstown area. Reports told of numerous marooned families and motorists in the flood-stricken area.

Bridges Buried.

All of Johnstown's bridges were under water. The big Napoleon street span was covered from one end to the other. The water surged to the second floors of the city hall and the two high schools—Central and Johnstown High.

Old-time residents said the flood equaled the great flood of 1889, rising rapidly after heavy rains in the same way it did at that time.

Mrs. D. P. Barbour, a resident, said over the telephone hundreds of persons were stranded in the Penn Traffic department store downtown. The flood waters crept into the second floor of the four-story structure while the stranded customers and

'It's Terrible,' Says Stranded Telephone Girl

Johnstown Operator, on 2d Floor, Tells of Cold, Hunger, Dark.

[A telephone operator in flood-stricken Johnstown told of the flood conditions over the last remaining long-distance line out of the flooded city to Philadelphia. Her story follows.]

By Operator Seven, Johnstown, Pa.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Johnstown, Pa., March 17.—It's terrible. The water must be 20 feet deep. The Snook Building is full of water past the first floor and almost up to us on the second floor.

I don't think we will be safe much longer.

There are only a handful of local lines still up. The police and hospital lines are out, so I don't know how many people were rescued, or whether any are dead.

Every minute another line goes out. We are working in the dark.

We have no heat and it's getting cold. We haven't eaten since noon and, boy, am I hungry!

We've been up here since 7 a. m. and can't get out. The current is so swift a rowboat can't operate and there are no motor boats on the streets yet, streets that are now rushing rivers.

I don't think many people were trapped downtown because when the water began rising about 1 o'clock, all the places closed and sent their employes home in the hills.

There are ten girls up here. We don't think we will be safe much longer."

Park Policeman Shot by Wife; Son Wounds Self With Knife

John Connelly, 46, a United States Park policeman, was shot and critically wounded early today at his home, 2220 Eighteenth street northwest. He was taken to Emergency Hospital. His wife, Alice, 38, was taken to the Third Precinct Station for questioning.

By a coincidence their son, John Connelly, jr., 20, was brought to Emergency Hospital suffering from serious knife wounds about an hour after the shooting. Apparently they were self-inflicted and occurred in a house at 1513 Meridian place. Police said the youth had become despondent. His action, so far as they knew, had no connection with the shooting. His wounds are in his chest.

The wounded man, a World War veteran and a policeman for 17 years, was shot in the left chest with a bullet from his service revolver. The bullet pierced his body, emerged through the shoulder and lodged in a bed on which he was lying.

Mrs. Connelly, clutching a prayer-book, was hysterical when police were summoned by Ralph G. Robey, a passerby, resident manager of an apartment house at 1811 Wyoming avenue northwest.

"He tried to kill me," police quoted her as saying. "I just took that gun and shot him. I still love him."

New Tax Levy Nears Adoption By House Unit

By Robert C. Albright.

Exploring and plugging all possible loopholes, a House Ways and Means sub-committee last night was nearing agreement on a rewritten corporation earnings tax proposal that will carry the greater burden of the Administration's new revenue program when a tax bill finally is reported to the House.

Elated at sharp gains reflected in March 16 income tax returns, which were 46.4 per cent higher than the comparable 15-day period in March, 1935, Treasury experts and subcommittee members nevertheless took the position that most of the pick-up had been discounted in the President's budget estimates.

At best, sub-committee members said, it would scale down the money sought in the new revenue hunt by some $32,000,000, even if a similar gain was maintained in the last half of March. Treasury spokesmen thought it would have no effect on the Administration's tax estimates.

Income-tax returns as of midnight, March 16, netted $281,758,032, compared with $192,429,413 received March 15, 1935. This brought returns for the first two-and-a-half months of the calendar year to $361,428,990, a gain of 45.6 per cent over the same period last year.

The President's 1936 budget estimates were predicated on a gain of only 30 per cent, and Treasury experts were of the opinion that this original estimate will be largely borne out over the last half of the fiscal year. They pointed out that a special effort was made to accelerate mid-March returns, and that an extra day was included in the computations.

Continued Gain in Doubt.

They could not conceal their gratification at mounting revenues, however, signifying, as it does, a continued business improvement and increased individual earning power. Ample indications of the trend were furnished in January, when collections of $36,060,989 moved up from $22,320,790 a year ago, and in February, when receipts of $43,609,969 increased from $33,309,929 in February, 1935.

But how much the continued gain will relieve the projected tax load was a matter of speculation. Chairman Samuel B. Hill, of the Ways and Means tax sub-committee, was of the opinion that "it may help us some, but not a lot."

Hill hopes to have the sub-committee's tax report in shape for full committee hearings, probably by next Tuesday. But, he added, technical problems "keep shoving up and complicating things."

"It looked plain and simple at the outset," the soft-spoken Washington State Representative said, "but, when we got into it, we found a lot of ramifications."

The "ramifications" largely have to do with anticipating loopholes in the corporate earnings tax proposal, and the plugging of them before the law is enacted. Concentration on the President's proposal to tax corporate earnings both before and after they are distributed, left little doubt that the group will attempt to force this plan to House enactment, regardless of what is done about the President's other tax recommendations, such as processing levies.

Foreign Investors Face Tax.

Phases of the corporate earnings tax plan, on which the sub-committee is said to be near agreement, are:

A plan to withhold, at the source, sufficient dividends of foreign investors in American corporations to pay the tax they otherwise would escape by living abroad.

A proposal to collect taxes on dividends going to such tax-exempt institutions as colleges before it goes to the institutions themselves, and without penalizing them. Such institutions' immunity to taxation would not be removed.

Whether to tax or not to tax receiverships, or income from liquidated corporations.

The sub-committee already has agreed to apply the "cushion" principle to taxes on corporations, to encourage accumulation of small reserves, but the rate schedule is tentative and may be changed.

A majority of the sub-committee also is in favor of exempting banks and mutual life insurance companies from the corporate earnings tax, but applying the tax to stock life insurance companies. No final agreement has been reached on this point.

Although the sub-committee has yet to consider the proposed broadened but lower schedule on processing taxes, a strong trend continued against including them in the bill. The President's proposed "windfall" tax, to reach refunded processing levies, probably will be accepted in principle.

Hill said he cannot yet definitely see the end of the sub-committee studies, but hoped they can "soon break the jam."

Although the Senate Finance Committee has yet to launch its tax studies, interviews yesterday with members of the group disclosed a wide variance of views.

Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, said he believed increased taxes on income is "the only way you can raise any substantial revenue." He plans to support an amendment to be proposed by Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., Wisconsin Progressive, lowering income tax exemptions, and raising the normal rate.

Concrete Toll Bridge Hearing Set Today

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., March 17.—A public hearing on the application of M. R. Carpenter, of Hancock, Md., to erect a concrete toll bridge, without draw span, across the Potomac River, 20 miles below Cumberland, between Oldtown, Md., and Green Spring, W. Va., will be held at 1 p. m. tomorrow at the Flora & Co. store, Green Spring. The War Department, to which application has been made, has urged all interested persons to be present at the hearing.

The public hearing will be to determine the suitability of the location, the adequacy of the clearances and amount of commerce carried on the river and the size of the boats used. Horizontal clearance of the bridge will be 20 feet and vertical clearance will be 7 feet.

Politics and People

By Franklyn Waltman

POLITICS is a very amusing business, if one has a sense of humor. Most political practitioners do not, and that adds to the funny side. Presidential aspirants, particularly, seem to lack the ability to appreciate the humor of their antics and the claims of their press agents.

The victim of the sting of the Presidential bee immediately undertakes to assume all the homely virtues—to emulate the mannerisms of the Nation's great men and to become profound, when not engaged in posing for what Al Smith termed "baloney" pictures.

Campaign managers and press agents are chiefly responsible for the antics performed by Presidential candidates and the exaggerated and farcical claims made in their behalf. But, if the candidates had a sense of humor, they would start laughing and refuse to permit the effort to perpetuate such frauds—efforts which most of the time fail because they do not fool those who know the candidate and those who do not know him are more likely to snicker than be struck with admiration.

The occasion for these thoughts is the receipt of two pieces of campaign material from the headquarters of Col. Frank Knox. One is the fourth issue of the news bulletin clip sheet of the "Frank Knox for President Committee" and the other is a small biographical volume titled "Frank Knox American," by Norman Beasley.

The clip sheet contains a photograph of Col. Knox with his face in the long ear of a donkey, captioned: "A symbol of the Democratic Party hears the word 'economy' for the first time in three years—from Frank Knox, candidate for the Republican nomination."

In what way that demonstrates Col. Knox's fitness to be President is hard to imagine, but undoubtedly his publicity staff, the boys who are trying to "build up" the candidate, told him such stuff was necessary to demonstrate that he is a good fellow.

From the fourth installment in clip sheet of "The Story of Frank Knox" we learn about "a crusading editor in a tough town," while in an adjoining column is the information that the Chicago publisher is the last survivor in Illinois of the Rough Riders, and that during the World War the colonel sentenced a young lieutenant to 30 days' confinement for going A. W. O. L.—and the lieutenant still likes him. Presumably these are all good reasons why Col. Knox should be given the Republican nomination.

The Beasley biography, written for campaign purposes, presents Col. Knox as the "fighting liberal and Progressive," born in poverty, but aggressive, clear-headed and ambitious. Since Theodore Roosevelt remains a hero of many Republicans, a chapter is devoted to Col. Knox "With the Rough Riders." Another portrays him as a "crusading editor," and the next as a "crusader in politics" and then as a Bull Moose. "Lessons in Yankee Economy" figure in his life as well as "Experiments in Budget Balancing"—according to chapter headings.

Apparently, the Knox managers have decided that it is necessary to sell their candidate to the rank and file Republicans. Much is made in the biography of the colonel's church attendance—a bid is directed to the prohibitionists in the statement that the colonel's newspaper carries no liquor advertisements—and reference is made to his aversion for high hats, even though he wears them and, on occasion, has ridden a white horse in a parade.

Such is the way we select Presidential candidates. Few aspirants are free from this kind of ballyhoo. Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas is portrayed as the home-loving candidate—barely able to wait until the evening comes so he can hurry home to hear Mrs. Landon play the harp, or to walk with the family down to the corner movie.

Some of Gov. Landon's advisers, some weeks ago, apparently decided that the name Alf—by which he has been known for years—was undignified and a request was made of the Topeka correspondents hereafter to use the more formal name Alfred. The Kansan poses with his portable typewriter, but he has not yet whispered in a donkey's ear nor has he gone hunting mountain lions. The Landon technique has been to make people curious about him by avoiding publicity.

Senator William E. Borah recently experimented with the same technique. Until the Presidential bee stung him a few months ago, the latch-string used to hang outside the Idahoan's office door. Any reporter in need of a story could have dropped in and obtained one. To be helpful, the Senator held periodic press conferences. This kept him on page one with some regularity.

Then Senator Borah went coy, declined to give interviews and stopped issuing statements. But the heat the campaign has reached has been too much for him. Out of his office came a formal statement last Saturday complaining against Standard Oil activities among Oklahoma Republicans. On Monday came a copy of a telegram on the same subject. The Idahoan soon will be holding his old-time press conferences again.

Also, it is amusing that in this, an election year, President Roosevelt will abandon his favorite fishing boat, Vincent Astor's luxurious yacht, the Nourmahal, for the dingier Coast Guard boat, the Potomac, recently assigned for White House use. Ever since his election the President has fished in Florida waters annually from the Nourmahal deck. But that doesn't go in a Presidential year—and if the water gets rough, the President will switch over to a Navy destroyer.

And what could be funnier than the five House members and a Senator parading before the Lobby Committee to explain solemnly that they accepted dinner invitations at the home of a man they did not know and that they were shocked to learn he was a lobbyist. There ought to be a law making every lobbyist wear at all times a badge proclaiming his calling.

Con. Gas Plans More Refunding

New York, March 17 (AP).—Floyd L. Carlisle, chairman of the Consolidated Gas Co. of New York told stockholders at the annual meeting today that rate cuts made last year would cause a drop in earnings during the first two quarters of 1936. He also said that the forthcoming $70,000,000 debenture issue of the parent company would bear 3¼ and 3½ per cent coupons, and that by July 1 the company expects to refund $55,000,000 Brooklyn Edison 5 per cent bonds with a 3¼ per cent coupon rate. The remaining Edison bonds, he said, amounting to $30,000,000 probably would be replaced around October 1 with a similar issue of 3⅛s.

The refunding operations would save the company between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 annually, he said.

Local Rivalries Snarl Bay State Delegates Race

Leaders of Both Parties Make Plans for Presidential Test April 28.

This is the third of a series of dispatches presenting a detailed view of State political situations as they affect the national political campaign scene.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, March 17.—Presidential candidacies in Massachusetts—both Democratic and Republican—were entangled in a maze of local rivalries today as leaders of the two parties made plans for the State's Presidential primary, April 28, when delegates to the national conventions will be elected.

Sharp differences, growing out of the bitter warfare of four years ago, were apparent in Democratic ranks. Gov. James M. Curley, original Roosevelt-for-President advocate in 1932, leads the Roosevelt forces this year, and former Gov. Joseph B. Ely, leader of the group which backed Alfred E. Smith in 1932, heads the anti-Administration forces.

Three names appear in the forefront of discussion of Republican Presidential prospects—Col. Frank Knox, Chicago and Manchester, N. H., publisher; Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, and Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, each with backers among prominent party workers. The name of former President Herbert Hoover also is a factor through his friendship with John Richardson, national committeeman and long-time supporter of Hoover.

Curley Ambitions Involved.

Involved in the confused Democratic situation are the political ambitions of Gov. Curley, already an announced candidate for the United States Senate seat of Marcus Coolidge (Democrat). Four years ago Curley led the Roosevelt forces in a primary fight for Roosevelt-pledged delegates to the national convention and was defeated by a ticket headed by Ely and Senator David I. Walsh. Walsh again lined up with Ely to oppose Curley in the gubernatorial fight two years ago, when the present Governor was victorious.

Walsh has announced his support of Roosevelt in the coming campaign and is expected to be a candidate with Curley for a place on the Roosevelt-pledged delegation to the Philadelphia convention.

Ely, a consistent opponent of New Deal policies since Roosevelt's election, followed the lead of Alfred E. Smith after the latter's Liberty League address with speeches along similar lines. He has urged an unpledged Democratic delegation to the convention. He recently spurned an offer of a place on the State committee's proposed ticket of delegates.

Favor Unpledged Delegation.

Indications were that Republican leaders generally would seek an unpledged delegation to the national convention and that contests for places on the delegation would be numerous between the supporters of the various candidates or prospective candidates.

Col. Knox's candidacy has met with a favorable response in some quarters, where he is looked upon to some degree as a "favorite son" of New England. With the New Hampshire delegation generally favorable to him, several Massachusetts leaders are backing him. The Landon boom has the backing of other elements, chief among those favorable being former Lieut. Gov. Gaspar G. Bacon, titular leader of the party in the State and a convention delegate candidate. Bacon was defeated by Curley for Governor two years ago.

Another element of Landon support is in the (T. R.) Roosevelt Club, of Massachusetts, although the club's head, Robert M. Washburn, unsuccessful candidate for United States Senator in 1934, is personally for Borah. Washburn proposed to enter a Borah-pledged ticket in the primary, but was requested not to by the Senator. The club was polled as to its presidential preferences and Washburn announced that Landon was favored by the members.

Differences in Party.

Indication of the intra-party differences came to light when National Committeeman Richardson projected a slate of unpledged delegates which included Charles Francis Adams, Secretary of the Navy under Hoover, and George F. Booth, Worcester publisher, and chairman of the Republican delegation four years ago. Other leaders labeled the ticket a "Hoover slate."

Curley's senatorial campaign already promises fireworks. In the event he wins the nomination he may be opposed by a Republican candidate whose name will have a familiar ring to Republicans. Among the announced candidates for the Republican nomination are Mayor Sinclair Weeks, of Newton, son of John W. Weeks, former U. S. Senator and Secretary of War in the Harding Cabinet, and Henry Cabot Lodge 3d, grandson of the late United States Senator Lodge. Lodge, now a State Representative, has expressed his opposition to phases of the Roosevelt Administration.

only temporarily and that others will be closed permanently when the work they are doing is completed. As work is completed in specific camps the personnel will be transferred to others that have been closed temporarily, but where there still is work to do.

The President's relief message is expected to bring immediate renewal of requests for an investigation. Senator Holt (Democrat), West Virginia, waited all yesterday afternoon for an opportunity to renew his attack on relief, but was unable to obtain the floor because of debate on the Army appropriations bill, to which Senator Fletcher (Democrat), Florida, attempted to tack the ship canal amendment. Holt probably will take the floor today with further charges of irregularities in his home State.

The House Appropriations Committee is expected to begin immediately the work of preparing a bill to conform to the President's request.

The Senate vote rejecting the Florida canal amendment was 39 to 32. The amendment called for $12,000,000 for the canal; $3,500,000 for the Conchas Dam in New Mexico; $2,500,000 for the Sardis Reservoir in Mississippi, and $2,000,000 for the Bluestone Reservoir in West Virginia.

Following defeat of the amendment, Senator Neely (Democrat), West Virginia, introduced an amendment to appropriate $8,000,000 for the last three projects and it was passed, 36 to 27.

Determination of both houses not to vote any additional funds for the canal, which has been described as the biggest Government undertaking ever started without specific Congressional approval, may mean the end of the work. There still, however, is the possibility that separate legislation can be enacted or that the President will allot more relief money for the project.

The fight over the canal appropriation is believed to make certain opposition to writing another "blank check" relief bill. It is expected that many members of Congress will fight any plan which would permit the President to allot relief money to start a project the completion of which would take years of time and the passage of further appropriations.

"Wholesale" Forgeries Denied.

Buffalo, N. Y., March 17 (AP).—Francis J. Downing, district director of the WPA here, said today charges of "wholesale" forgeries of WPA pay vouchers were "false."

A Federal investigator has been here since the charges were made last week, and Downing's statement said only six cases of fraud out of more than 300,000 pay checks had been uncovered.

Downing added that Henry Kloes, principal witness for the Citizens Unemployment Relief League, which made the charges, had "signed a statement in which he admitted that no other checks in his name went anywhere else so far as he knows."

Condon, Back In N. Y., Silent On Hauptmann

Minister Quotes Educator as Unwilling to Make Trip to Trenton.

By the Associated Press.

Trenton, N. J., March 17.—Dr. John F. Condon, Lindbergh ransom intermediary, arrived in New York today from Panama, but his return apparently did nothing to settle the matter of when and where he would be questioned by Gov. Harold G. Hoffman.

"Jafsie," usually talkative, declined to speak his thoughts on Bruno Richard Hauptmann and the eleventh-hour fight to save him from the electric chair. Here in Trenton the Governor had no comment to make on Condon's silence.

Quoted by Minister.

A shipboard acquaintance of Dr. Condon indicated Gov. Hoffman might have to go to the Bronx if he wished to talk about the case. The Rev. Henry Beets, director of Presbyterian missions in South America, quoted Dr. Condon as saying he would be happy to see the Governor in his Bronx home.

"But I don't see any reason why I should go to New Jersey," the minister said Jafsie had told him.

Hauptmann is under sentence to die the week of March 30, and unless execution is stayed he will probably go to the chair two weeks from tonight. The Governor has said he has no legal power to save him, but suggested a judicial reprieve could be sought if new evidence, warranting another trial, can be found.

Wanted Him in Trenton.

The Governor, an authoritative source said, wanted to question Dr. Condon at the State House and would invite him to come here and talk in the presence of Attorney General David T. Wilentz and Prosecutor Anthony M. Hauck, jr., of Hunterdon County.

C. Lloyd Fisher, Hauptmann's chief counsel, also has expressed a desire to question Condon.

Hauptmann's wife, Anna, paid him, a death house visit today When she emerged from the prison she said there was "nothing new." Hauptmann, she said, was still confident he would not be executed.

Mrs. Hauptmann said she told him Dr. Condon had come home, but her husband had no comment to make.

Girl Talks a Week After 'Flu' Attack

Shreveport, La., March 17 (AP).—Physicians attempted today to diagnose the case of Ruby Poole, 16, who has talked incessantly for more than a week.

Ruby, daughter of J. H. Poole, an oil worker of Haynesville, La., was brought to the hospital here last Wednesday when she developed the "talking spell" after an attack of influenza.

The girl seems rational and has discussed many subjects intelligently, displaying an imposing vocabulary.

Ruby has a high rating in her school work, is a member of a national high school honor society and is editor of the school paper.

The doctor said he believed one of the most effective forms of treatment consisted in separating her from her close relatives. The girl's mother has been permitted to see her only once during the six days she has been in the sanitarium.

Greencastle Schools To Retire 4 Teachers

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Greencastle, Pa., March 17.—Four members of the teaching staff of the public schools here will be replaced at the close of this term, following action taken by the school board last week to retire all teachers who have reached the age of 62 and to terminate the contracts of all teachers who marry during the school term.

Those who will be affected by the retirement age are Miss Emma Goetz and Miss Cordie Hawbaker, teachers of the seventh and eighth grades. Mrs. Margaret Gillan Stouffer, an elementary teacher, and Mrs. Jennie B. Elliott, commercial teacher in the high school, were married during the term.

75 Pupils Are Marooned In School By Blizzard

Fletcher, N. C., March 17 (AP).—The worst blizzard of the winter blocked mountain highways late today and forced more than 75 rural pupils to spend the night in the Fletcher Graded School.

Those marooned are from the Hoopers Creek community. Other pupils were able to make their way home. One bus had not returned here after leaving this afternoon with children for the Boiling Springs vicinity.

School authorities supplied food for the youngsters in the schoolhouse, which was kept well heated.

Caucasian's Feet = Five Jobs; WPA Favors Monkey Murals

Radio 'Projector' With Feat of Much Work Defended by Boss.

Six paid supervisors, receiving, in one case at least, as much as $3,600 a year in addition to pay from regular private employment, 36 relief workers drawing "security wages," and a varying number of unpaid volunteers, are engaged in the $75,000 WPA radio project being presented by the Interior Department's Office of Education, it was learned yesterday from William Dow Boutwell, director. This is the project which put on the Monday night test question program, in which were such queries as how many feet a full-grown Caucasian has, and where is the place to buy a goober.

Regarding the personnel, Boutwell said:

"I know of no rule which requires that WPA workers do not have outside interests."

Director Has 4 Other Jobs.

This was Boutwell's explanation of the fact that Rudolf Schramm, employed by the Radio Project as a supervisor at a $3,600-per-year salary, also is paid by a broadcasting chain locally for program arrangements on a per-program basis, plays his piano-accordion at a local restaurant every noon, and at a night club in the evenings (on a salary basis in each case), besides training approximately 16 pupils privately in the piano-accordion.

Boutwell, however, stressed that Schramm had asked to be allowed to drop his "outside activities" in order to devote his time more fully to the Radio Project. Boutwell, feeling that this would work a hardship on Schramm financially, has resisted these pleas, he said.

Boutwell, in responding to criticism of the project, indicated that its primary purpose had not been to take men from relief rolls per se, but to stimulate public interest in education and news. As an editor of the Federal Office of Education, Boutwell has created a series of Education In The News programs over N. B. C. networks for two years, on a purely experimental basis, working to stimulate public interest. When expansion of the experiment was suggested by Education Commissioner John Studebaker, the device of financing a project by WPA funds was adopted.

In the present set-up, which will have three programs in production by the end of this week, 36 relief workers are employed.

These were taken from WPA rolls, rolls of former Civilian Conservation Corps men, and from professional project rolls, he said.

Besides these people in Washington, six supervsiors are maintained. These are not necesarily from relief rolls. Schramm is one of these supervisors.

Volunteers Are Not Paid.

The third class participating in the project are volunteer workers. These are amateurs who work on the programs for the radio experience involved, and are unpaid, said Boutwell, in answering criticisms that participants in the programs are in some cases unpaid.

Boutwell, while indicating that possibly the grade of the programs as finished and presented was a matter of opinion, pointed to the fact that the programs had to pass the N. B. C. program groups before presentation, and had been passed as acceptable in most instances by such trained radio men.

He pointed to the fact that while WPA contributed $75,000 to the project, N. B. C. was giving free time that, at present rates, would bring $200,000 per year. He said:

"There is not another WPA project in the entire country in which private enterprise has contributed to such a huge extent."

Criticisms had been directed at the program presented Monday night on the grade of the material presented; at the fact that Doris Rook, one of the two speaking participants, was unpaid (she was Miss Information); at the fact that Schramm, furnishing incidental music for background purposes, was a highly paid N. B. C. staff man; at the fact that $75,000 had been allotted for a project at present employing fewer than 50 workers, and at the fact that more than two months had been consumed in preparation before the first program was presented on the air.

In answering the latter point, Boutwell pointed out that much more than two months' time was usually spent by advertising agencies and other groups in preparing good radio programs, and that, when considered from all practical aspects of production, audition, creation of material, etc., the combined efforts of 36 people to produce such programs as that of Monday night were not unusual.

The Psychopathic Ward Wants Fun, But Bars War and Cubism.

By the Associated Press.

Elgin, Ill., March 17.—Murals painted by WPA artists on the walls of the Elgin State Mental Hospital must meet psyc..ological, as well as artistic criticism, their foreman, Frank W. Kirk, explained today.

On the ground that laughter is an aid to sanity and that topics of war, and politics tend to drive excitable people mad, a carefully selected list of subjects for the painters has been prepared.

Monkeys Good, War Bad.

Such "gentle humor" as monkeys throwing coconuts from the top of a palm tree was recommended for the WPA brushes, Kirk said. And there apparently is no limit at what the coconuts may be thrown.

Laughter, it was explained, acts as a sedative to disordered minds.

War and politics, on the other hand, were listed as inciting and an unfit subjects for murals in this institution.

Religion and sex, Kirk added, are taboo likewise.

Next to humor, the foreman asserted, whimsy is the best subject for the hospital murals. For example:

Children in a Maypole dance.
A husking bee.
Fishermen.

Cubism Worse Than War.

Peace and quiet, exemplified by snow-capped mountains, wooded hills, ancient temples and pyramids, and lazy landscapes are also first rate.

Whatever else the 24 WPA painters may put on the hospital walls, Kirk emphasized there will be no modernistic or cubist designs. He said they would be worse even than war.

Gas Kills Girl, Sister in Coma; Pact Is Hinted

Doctors Work Through Night to Revive Victim in Mystery.

Doctors at Emergency Hospital last night were working to revive Nettie Tippett, 21, who was overcome yesterday by gas that killed her younger sister, Bessie, 16.

The girls were found in bed with the windows tightly shut and gas flowing from three jets of a small burner in their sparsely-furnished room at 2327 Pennsylvania avenue, northwest.

Bessie was dead when the Rescue Squad arrived. Her sister was taken to the hospital and placed under the respirator. She had not recovered six hours later and her condition was described as "growing steadily weaker."

If Nettie dies without regaining consciousness the mystery of what happened in the little furnished room between 11 o'clock Monday night, when the girls were last seen alive, and 10 o'clock yesterday morning when they were discovered by the landlady, is likely to remain unsolved.

Suicide Pact Probable.

From the inspection of the rooms yesterday police were unable to determine whether it was an accident or suicide and, in case of the latter, whether the younger girl was an innocent victim or a partner in a suicide pact.

Bessie, who lives with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Tippett, of Baileys Cross Roads, Va., had come to spend the night with her sister, the landlady, Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, told police.

In Nettie's handbag was found an unfinished three-page letter hinting at suicide. The letter, addressed to an unidentified "John," read in part: "Come see me in your automobile in the middle of the week. If things don't get better you'll find my body in the river."

Police, however, thought the note was written several days ago and had no direct connection with yesterday's tragedy, save to indicate that Nettie had been despondent for some time. Detective Sergt. Aubrey Tolson refused to divulge further contents of the letters pending developments in the girl's condition.

Nettie, Mrs. Wilson informed the police, worked two days a week, "but she didn't tell me where." She had been living at the rooming house for two years, being registered as Mrs. Nettie East, wife of James East, 27, a cab driver. The couple had been separated for the last five or six months, Mrs. Wilson said.

Police were unable to communicate with East, who was making the most of yesterday's "taxicab weather." His father, James D. East, sr., undersheriff of Arlington County, Va., denied his son was married to Nettie.

He revealed that the younger James was married almost six years ago to Ruth Lantz, who lived in Baltimore, and that they had separated within two months of the marriage.

The first hint of the tragedy was brought to Mrs. Wilson at 8 o'clock yesterday morning by one of the roomers on the same floor who smelled gas. Mrs. Wilson discounted the report, believing the gas was coming from a slight leak in one of the fixtures.

Goldfish Escape Gas.

Two hours later, passing Nettie's room, she detected the gas and pushed open the unlocked door. She saw the girls stretched out in bed in their night clothes, the covers pulled tightly around them.

The room was in order. The alarm clock on the mantelpiece had run down, but had not been set. Beside the clock was a goldfish bowl in which two fishes were swimming about, apparently none the worse for the gas that filled the room.

Positive identification as to which of the girls was Bessie and which was Nettie was held up for several hours until police could communicate with W. H. Tippett, their father, who was at home in Virginia. The nearest phone to the Tippett home was 2 miles away and a special messenger conveyed the tragic news.

Accident, Father Insists.

After identifying the girls, the father, seemingly dazed, insisted that "it must have been an accident."

Coroner A. Magrauder MacDonald withheld issuing a death certificate pending further investigation.

Senate Approves Potomac Projects

The Potomac River and Washington waterfront improvements proposed by Army engineers yesterday cleared their second hurdle when the Senate approved the committee amendment to the War Department appropriations bill. Final action on the bill itself was delayed until today.

The amendment carries $50,000,000 above the House figure for unspecified river and harbor projects over the country. The War Department engineers in their prospectus, however, listed $167,000 for dredging the Potomac River and for beginning extensive improvements on the north side of the Washington Channel.

$1,000,000 Manville Kidnap Plot and $427,000 Theft Clews Reported.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 17.—Raiding a West Side rooming house transformed into a powerful arsenal of the underworld, police today arrested seven men and three women described by Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine as "merciless assassins" who planned "a series of the most bloody gang killings New York has ever had."

$427,000 Theft Clew Hinted.

To various members of the group authorities charged:

1. A plot to kidnap for ransom Thomas Manville, asbestos heir.
2. The brazen $427,000 holdup of an armored money truck in Brooklyn two years ago.
3. The $15,000 holdup of the Fort Lee (N. J.) Bank & Trust Co. last December.
4. The cold-blooded slaying of Joseph Butler, boss of the Chelsea docks, where the largest liners in the world berth, as he walked along busy Thirty-fourth street last Saturday night.
5. A series of less spectacular bank holdups, jewel robberies and minor crimes.

"The killing of Butler, we have established, was the initial move of one band of merciless assassins to exterminate all competition," Valentine said. "This is indeed a desperate job."

Opening a safe in the gang's hideout with acetylene torches late today, police found six machine guns, a hand grenade, three automatic rifles and a quantity of other arms and ammunition. Additional weapons had been found elsewhere in the house, including repeating rifles, revolvers and sawed-off shotguns. It was the latter type of weapon, fired from a passing automobile, that killed Butler and wounded two of his companions.

Planned $1,000,000 Kidnaping.

Extraordinary precautions were taken as the suspects were transferred to police headquarters.

The alleged Manville kidnap plot was disclosed by a detective who asked that his name be withheld. He said the raiding party knew before its members broke into the rooming house at dawn and seized the prisoners that they had been planning some crime.

Manville, at his estate, Bon Repos, near New Rochelle, said Detectives Charles McGown and Frank Crimmins, who led the raid, told him the prisoners had intended to slay his seven guards and take him to Canada for ransom.

He revealed he had received two letters and two telegrams within the last few days threatening him with kidnaping and demanding $1,000,000.

Mystery Voice Heckles De Valera in Broadcast

Dublin, March 17 (U.P.).—A few million fighting Irish sought in vain tonight for the owner of a voice which continually interrupted Free State President Eamon de Valera's St. Patrick's Day address.

As De Valera approached the climax of his speech, broadcast throughout Ireland, the mysterious voice said:

"Hello, comrades! For the last half-hour you have been witnessing a display of British imperialism."

Commander Improved.

Richmond, Va., March 17 (AP).—Frank Rennie, commander of the Virginia department of the American Legion and Richmond businessman, yesterday was released from Stuart Circle Hospital here after making a recovery from pneumonia. He became ill at Staunton February 22 and was brought here by ambulance.

AAA to Launch Its Soil Subsidy Plan Tomorrow

5 Regional Administrations for New Law Announced by Wallace.

By the Associated Press.

Cheered by the Senate's speedy approval of necessary funds, AAA officials moved quickly yesterday to complete plans for launching the new soil conservation subsidy program tomorrow.

Secretary Wallace announced reorganization of the AAA and the establishment of five regional administrations under the new law. In a radio address, he warned farmers that some of their recommendations concerning the program, offered at four regional conferences, might be modified or rejected this year.

Within a few hours after Senate and House conferees agreed on the $2,889,751,905 independent offices supply bill, including money for both the farm program and for prepayment of the bonus, the conference report was approved by the Senate without a record vote.

The House is expected to act today in an effort to send the measure to Roosevelt for his signature before he leaves Thursday for the South.

The AAA reorganization officially launched the disintegration of the huge farm program administrative set-up in Washington, which at its height required employment of about 4,000 persons here.

The remaining staff of 3,200 gradually will be scattered into the regional offices and it is expected that by next November only 1,000 will be left here. Many Washington workers are expected to take jobs in the field.

The five regions for administering the conservation program include all 48 States. The regional divisions of the AAA, which replace the old commodity sections, are:

Southern Division, including most of the cotton States, with Cully A. Cobb, former chief of the cotton section, as director.

East Central District.

East Central Division, Tennessee, Kentucky and the Middle Atlantic States, with J. B. Hutson as regional director. Hutson formerly was director of the AAA division of tobacco and miscellaneous crops.

Northeast Division, Pennsylvania, New York and New England States, also under Hutson's direction.

North Central Division, the principal corn belt States, Gerald B. Thorne, director. Thorne was formerly director of the AAA division of livestock and feed grains.

Western Division, the principal wheat States and the Pacific Coast, under direction of George E. Farrell, former head of the AAA division of grains.

The AAA's division of marketing and marketing agreements, program planning, sugar section and consumers counsel remain intact.

U. S. Concessions Sought for Blind

A bill authorizing the operation of concessions in Federal buildings at Washington and elsewhere by blind persons passed the House Monday upon recommendation of the Committee on Labor.

Introduced by Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, the measure, if adopted by the Senate and approved by the President, will allow the setting up of stands by blind persons under licenses to be issued by the office of education, Interior Department.

The bill provides further that a survey be made of concession-stand opportunities for the blind in this country and of opportunities for blind persons in private industry and that these data be made available to the public.

Virginia Tornado Cuts 20-Mile Path

Danville, Va., March 17 (AP).—A tornado, which swept a path 20 miles long through Pittsylvania County, from Hurt to the edge of Chatham, today left many people homeless, most of them colored farmers. The Red Cross unit from Roanoke was understood to be caring for the stricken families.

The storm blew trees across the road, ripped roofs from roadside service stations, moved houses from their foundations and demolished a number of cabins. No loss of life or severe injuries were reported.

The storm swept along the course of Cherrystone Creek, but missed the old Pittsylvania County almshouse, almost directly in its path. Widespread damage also was reported around Gretna, and also in the vicinity of Sycamore.

attack. At the morning session Becker stressed the extent of the company's set-up and operations, showing that, dependent on which index is taken, the company controls from 85 to 90 per cent of all the telephone business in the Nation, that recent figures show 13,844,663 telephones in use over 80,500,000 miles of wire, that the assets of the company total in excess of $5,000,000,000, and that the consolidated gross income for last year was $934,000,000.

Control Stressed.

Becker hammered throughout the day on Gifford and Bloom in an effort to show that Graybar Electric Co., organized by Western Electric in 1928, and later sold to a holding company of employes, the Graybar Management Corporation, was in actual fact controlled completely by Western Electric, and thus by A. T. & T.

Gifford said that this was not important, as the electrical jobbing business, with which the supply department of Western Electric and the Graybar Electric Co. concern themselves, forms but a small part of the whole structure in point of business.

Becker countered with the assertion that this was of high importance, since Graybar rates had been cited by Western Electric attorneys many times as justification for high rates, as though the two were competitors.

Records Produced.

Becker produced masses of records, photostats of letters from the files of the companies concerned, and other evidence, to show that when Graybar Electric had been sold to the employes' group (which Bloom characterized as a "gesture of generosity") control actually remained with Western Electric.

To prove this he recorded portions of the tri-party agreement of sale, concluded between Electrical Research Products, Inc. (usually referred to as ERPI), the Graybar Electric Co. and the Graybar Management Corporation, the employes' organization. In this deal he asserted that ERPI acted for Western Electric, and cited numerous instances in which the two groups had the same officers, directors and counsel.

It was brought out that Western Electric retained non-voting preferred stock in Graybar Electric Co. Gifford and Bloom contended that this relationship was merely to retain certain financial controls until they had received a return of the complete sale price, since the employes had been able to raise but $1,200,000 of the $3,000,000 purchase price.

Written Approval Given.

Becker showed, however, that nearly every act of the Graybar Electric Co. had to be passed on in written approval by Western Electric officers before it could be completed.

In this way he endeavored to show that control of Graybar Electric rested actually with Western Electric.

However, both Gifford and Bloom, the former quietly and the latter irascibly, denied completely that Western Electric controlled actions of Graybar Electric other than such financial matters as were concerned with their right to secure through the years a return of the unpaid remainder of the purchase price.

In 1928, and at various times since, it was shown Gifford has told Congressional committees and other groups that Graybar "had been sold," and that no interest other than the balance of the purchase price, in preferred stock, had been retained.

Stock Purchased.

Becker also brought out that when, on April 13, 1931, WECO Corporation, another Western Electric subsidiary, had bought $8,500,000 of 6 per cent debentures from Film Securities Corporation, still another subsidiary, the Graybar Electric Co. had been "induced" to buy $500,000 worth at 96.

When Gifford returned to the stand in the late afternoon, Becker began his effort to show that the telephone company had matched its decline in revenues in depression years with a reduction in payrolls and employes. He quoted Gifford's statement from a magazine article written by the latter in which the president said, in describing "how corporation management must look after its workers," that there was a definite obligation for corporations to have a "stewardship of the workers' interests as well as that of the investors' interests."

Gifford then testified that with the spread of the dial telephone's use, employes were not "displaced," but were merely "not replaced" as time passed. Thus employment in the six years from 1929 to 1935 in the A. T. & T. declined from 364,000 employes to 244,000 employes, a 32 per cent drop.

Dial Phones Added.

Gifford, who was chairman of former President Hoover's Spread-the-Work Committee, then admitted that operating revenues had declined but 13 per cent in the same period. Payrolls, it was shown, declined from $526,000,000 in 1929 to $387,000,000 in 1935, a drop of 26 per cent, while the number of telephone stations dropped only 10 per cent and the average number of daily calls fell only 8 per cent.

Gifford said that the decline in new construction accounted for the decline in employment. Becker then introduced figures to show that in the traffic department of the company 70,000 employes had been released in the six years, and of these 34,000, almost half, were experienced operators.

In the meantime, it was shown, 2,600,000 dial phones have been added since 1929, with the total dial phones now in use set at 6,660,989, or 40 per cent of the total stations.

Income Drop Matched.

Becker then drew the conclusion that the company had roughly matched its income drop with a pay roll employe reduction, while still maintaining dividends of $9 per share (9 per cent on par, or 8 per cent when paid in capital on a basis of $114 per share) to investors holding stock.

The hearings, at which Paul A. Walker, directing the investigation of the A. T. & T., acted as chairman, were attended by Commissioners Thad Brown, Anning S. Prall, Norman Case, Dr. Irvin Stewart and E. O. Sykes.

Wealthy Bramin Shoots Woman, Kills Himself

Georgetown, British Guiana, March 17 (AP).—Doctors announced today that Mrs. Rona Whitney, 20, said by police to have been shot by the scion of a wealthy Brahmin family who afterward killed himself, had an even chance of recovery.

The woman, authorities asserted, was shot yesterday by Ramsubhag Misir, wealthy Indian, for whom she had left her husband, a dentist in Jamaica, three months ago. She came here with her 5-year-old daughter, Gloria, who was the only witness to the shooting.

Her husband, a dentist, born in New York, formerly lived here, but moved to Jamaica two years ago.

Coordinations Called Threat To Rail Labor

'Worthwhile Economies' to Reduce Jobs Pelley Tells Roosevelt.

By the Associated Press.

J. J. Pelley, president of the Association of American Railroads, informed President Roosevelt yesterday that "no worthwhile economies" could be effected through rail coordinations "without taking men out of service."

Pelley replied to a letter from the President urging that rail management and labor compose their differences over methods of protecting employes displaced in consolidations.

J. A. Phillips, vice chairman of the Association of Railway Labor Executives, wrote the President yesterday that labor representatives could not be expected to carry negotiations to the point where the interests of those they represented would be jeopardized.

Both Pelley and Phillips, however, agreed to Roosevelt's suggestion that they confer with him before breaking off their conferences, under way since December.

Another meeting of management and labor representatives yesterday failed to bring any tangible results.

Phillips said a series of conferences instituted Monday might continue throughout the week, adding:

"We have done a lot of talking, but we haven't done anything concrete yet."

In his letter, Pelley told Roosevelt that rail management "is in accord with your suggestion that every possible economy should be effected."

Adding that "worth-while" economies would necessitate taking men from service, the rail executive continued:

"In action of this kind, railroad management desires to avoid undue hardship to the employes and fully concurs in the view you express, that the question is one which should be handled and concluded by agreement rather than by legislation."

Housing Plans Due After Trip By Roosevelt

Program Is Unsettled on Eve of Florida Visit; Grimm Quits Post.

President Roosevelt will depart tomorrow for his three-week Florida fishing trip with the problem of housing legislation still unsolved.

The President said yesterday that conferences would continue during his absence and that he hoped to be able to announce a program upon his return.

Peter Grimm, Treasury housing expert, left the Government service yesterday to return to his real estate business in New York. He has been at odds with some of the other Government housing officials over what should be done to encourage slum clearance and private housing.

President Roosevelt said that Grimm had intended to stay only three months when he came to Washington, and that he had stayed eight.

While Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, has repeatedly announced that he was almost ready to introduce a housing bill, it is not expected he will put in a measure before the President returns.

A bill already is in Congress extending the repair and modernization insurance activities of the Federal Housing Administration but no step has been taken toward further slum clearance legislation or to amend the mortgage loan insurance provisions of the FHA.

Reich's Envoys Will Fly Today To London Talk

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 17.—Two special airplanes will depart bearing a German delegation to a London meeting of the Council of the League of Nations, from which the Reich angrily withdrew in 1933, eight months after Adolf Hitler began his rule.

Augmented by secretaries, interpreters and personal aids, the Germans will arrive in England about 20 strong. Joachim von Ribbentrop, Hitler's ambassador at large, will head the delegation.

Credit for breaking Hitler's previous refusal to compromise with the Council in his demand that it consider his substitute peace proposals was given in official German circles as Sir Eric Phipps, the British ambassador.

Pleads Peace Cause.

Sir Eric was described as having visited Der Fuehrer Sunday and to have spoken so eloquently of the dire need of European co-operation that Hitler agreed to have Germany face a Franco-Belgian accusation of a breach of the Locarno Treaty. The night before in Munich Der Fuehrer said he would not permit Germany to be dragged before one international tribunal after another.

After that it was only a question of finding formulas that would satisfy the national pride of both Germany and France.

The foreign office telegraphed Dr. Joseph A. C. Avenol, secretary general of the League, that Germany would be represented in London.

The Council had assured Berlin the German delegates would sit with full equality with thosee of other powers when it considers the Franco-Bilgian accusations. Acceptance of the invitation from London was called within 30 minutes, following a hasty conference between Hitler and his advisers.

Delegation of Four.

Members of the delegation proper will be Von Ribbentrop, Dr. Hans D. Dieckhoff, Dr. Woermann of the legal department of the foreign office, and Oscar Wingen of the foreign office economic department.

The delegation will leave Berlin around noon and get down to work in London Thursday morning.

Hitler, who is stumping the Reich explaining his remilitarization of the Rhineland, will have made 11 speeches before the Reichstag election March 29.

He already has spoken three times. His tentative program includes addresses at Hoenigsberg, March 18; Hamburg the twentieth; Beuthren the twenty-second; Berlin the twentieth-fourth; Chemnitz the twentieth-fifth; Neunkirchen the twenty-sixth; Essen the twentieth-eight and Cologne the twentieth-eighth.

Pianist Plans Recital.

Louis Laughlin, of Chehalis, Wash., will give a recital at the dinner dance of the Washington State and Alaska Society tomorrow night in the National Press Club auditorium. Mr. Laughlin is a graduate and former associate teacher of the American Conservatory of Music in Chicago. Among his concert activities have been tours as accompanist for Maria Kurenko and Marusia Sava.

Peace Outlook Doubtful

carno and Versailles Treaties. Tension was visibly eased by Germany's agreement to take part in consideration of the resolution.

Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, pledged that he would work for a conciliatory plan acceptable to both France and Germany.

Under his plan of action, however, Great Britain would rush to the aid of France and Belgium in the event of an attack by Germany.

Eden contends there eventually must be negotiations for an entirely new framework of European collective security replacing the scrapped Locarno Treaty.

Won by British Pledge.

Germany's consent to come to London, it was understood, was won by Eden's promise the British would consider Hitler's peace proposals, advanced as a substitute for Locarno.

"The whole world," declared Litvinoff, "knows that neither the Soviet Union nor France has any claims to German territory and that they are not striving to change the frontiers of Germany. * * *

"Analyzing the sum total of Mr. Hitler's proposal, I come to the conclusion that they not only would represent no compensation for the harm done to the organization of peace by condoning his breach of international treaties, but would themselves strike a blow at the organization of peace and at the League of Nations."

Litvinoff said Russia would identify itself with members of the Council "who register in their most decisive manner their indignation at a breach of international treaty obligations, who condemn it and who support the most effective measures to avert similar infringements in the future."

The French were overjoyed at Litvinoff's speech, feeling it gives them needed support at a crucial moment.

The fiery Soviet statesman, with biting sarcasm, scorned Hitler's "peace proposals" with the declaration the League should not offer "a bonus to the aggressor by adopting a basis of agreement profitable to the aggressor."

Note to Ambassador.

Eden gave formal assurances to Germany that the British Government would make every effort to induce the other powers to discuss Hitler's peace proposals. The pledge was embodied in a note he handed the German Ambassador at the foreign office. The note said:

"His majesty's government is doing and will continue to do its utmost to find the means to bring about a satisfactory settlement of the present difficulties.

"It is clear to his majesty's government that the proposals of the German chancellor, as well as proposals by the other powers concerned, must be discussed at the proper time.

"The German government will appreciate, however, that it is not possible for his majesty's government to give a more explicit undertaking at this state."

The note followed a statement given in Berlin today to the British Ambassador to the effect that "the German government expects the British government to do its utmost under the circumstances to bring about a discussion with the interested powers of Chancellor Hitler's proposals."

Joachim von Ribbentrop, Hitler's ambassador-at-large, will represent him at the Council's sessions. He and his staff will arrive tomorrow by airplane and probably attend the first session Thursday. Germany withdrew from the League of Nations in 1933, angered by a refusal of the powers to grant her the privilege of rearming—one taken by Hitler a year ago when he broke military clauses of the Treaty of Versailles.

The reply from Germany, which did much to ease international tension, came immediately after Council delegates had ended a secret session at St. James Palace. The meeting was immediately resumed. The text of the German reply was:

"I acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your telegram of March 16 and have the honor to inform you that Ambassador von Ribbentrop will represent the German government in the Council of the League of Nations in the examination of the question raised by the French and Belgian governments.

"He will be available in London from Thursday morning upward.

(Signed.)

"BARON VON NEURATH,
"Minister of the Reich for Foreign Affairs."

League officials said there would be no vote on whether Germany was guilty of treaty violation until Von Ribbentrop had stated the Reich's case before the Council.

Before Hitler's acceptance a deadlock had been threatened between Britain on the one hand and France and Belgium on the other as to what course of action to take because of the German remilitarization of the Rhineland.

An unconfirmed report said a British memorandum contained these two principal points:

1. She will not support any idea of sanctions against Germany.
2. She proposes a new Locarno pact, Germany participating, to be merged with the covenant of the League of Nations.

French delegates had said they would refuse to yield in their refusal to negotiate with Hitler or in their demand that the League condemn Germany as a treaty violator.

Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin, of France, made what his delegation described as "a last appeal" through King Edward for Great Britain to fulfill her obligations under the Locarno Treaty by backing France to the fullest. Officially Flandin's visit was described as one of "courtesy." After the audience, the King also received Paul van Zeeland, Premier of Belgium.

Flandin's statement apparently did not discourage the British, who recognized that weeks, probably months, of work lie ahead before difficulties can be worked out and new treaties formulated.

Army on Rhine There to Stay, Goering Asserts

By the Associated Press.

Cologne, Germany, March 17.—German troops in the Rhineland "are here and they are here to stay," Gen. Hermann Wilhelm Goering, minister of air, told the world tonight from the balcony of the city hall here.

"We are willing to talk peace on the basis of Der Fuehrer's proposals, but we will not discuss Rhineland sovereignty—that is nobody's business but ours," thundered Goering, one of Adolf Hitler's closest associates.

Soon afterward Goering departed for Dortmund. He was cheered at the station by crowds as he entered the imperial waiting room, which blazed with crystal chandeliers and floral decorations as in the old days when the former Kaiser Wilhelm boarded a train at Cologne.

It was a feverish day at Cologne. There were repeated alterations of Goering's schedule.

Hitler youths and maidens had been mobilized since 7:30 a. m. and thousands of clerks and factory workers given the day off to attend a mass meeting scheduled for 1:30. Later it was announced Goering would speak at 4:30, but it was 6 p. m. when he finally arrived by airplane at the flying field.

He inspected the airport—built by the British during the post-war occupation—then motored to City Hall Square, where he was the central figure in festivities celebrating the arrival of German troops.

Soldiers from the new Cologne garrison were among organizations welcoming him.

After he had gone the streets of Cologne looked as though they had been through a rain of sandwich papers.

Spain Declares Riots on Wane; Death Toll Is 9

Government 'Concerned,' But Plans No Further Peace Measures.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, March 17.—Fresh disorders in Spain's bitter political strife had cost nine lives tonight, but the Government expressed confidence violence was on the wane.

A state of alarm throughout the nation was proclaimed by the new Left government after a partial ultimatum from the army to stop the bloodshed.

The government does not expect to resort to any more drastic peace-enforcing steps than have already been employed, Amos Salvador, minister of the interior, announced.

He admitted the cabinet was deeply concerned over the week-end when flareups in various parts of Spain threatened to spread. He said, however, officials were reassured by the sporadic and isolated nature of the outbursts, indicating they were apparently without central direction.

A Communist demonstrator was killed during a clash with Rightists at Asturias, bringing the number of dead in the most recent outbreaks to nine.

There has been prolonged fighting between Leftists and Rightists since the former won a convincing victory in the February parliamentary elections and placed Manuel Azana, Left leader, in power. There have been numerous anti-clerical disorders.

Incendiaries attempted to fire a church and convent school at Santa Cruz de Mudela, Province of Ciudad Real, but were driven off by police. In Oviedo construction workers continued a strike but there was no violence.

Civil guards were sent from Sevilla to Castillo de los Guardas when 200 miners seized an iron mine closed recently because of labor difficulties and announced they would work it on a communistic basis. The miners were dispersed without bloodshed.

Madrid police, continuing efforts to clear up the attempted assassination of a leading Socialist deputy, Prof. Luis Jiminez Asua, took two Fascist suspects to the scene of the shooting on Goya street and re-enacted the assault with Jiminez repeating his movements of last Thursday, when he escaped injury but his bodyguard was killed.

Firm Foreign Policy Pledged by Tokyo

Tokyo, March 17 (AP).—A statement by the new Japanese government, issued after the army and navy dictated extensive revisions, pledged a "positive foreign policy."

"Full provision for national defense" will be made, the declaration added. It was signed by Premier Koki Hirota and bore the approval of Emperor Hirohito.

Included in the statement were professions of a desire to "contribute to world peace and to the well-being of mankind."

The declaration did not mention the European crisis, and avoided specific reference to the strained relations with the Soviet Union beyond emphasizing Japan's "mission as a stablizing force in East Asia."

they feared it would run into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Nor was there any assurance that the flood was over. The Weather Bureau warned "more rain is expected and precautions should be taken."

The National Guard was called out early in the evening. Forty guardsmen, together with 70 WPA workers and 35 policemen, joined with 300 volunteeers in rescue work.

An appeal for help was sent to the American Red Cross in Washington, and last night Mrs. Margaret Lewis, of the headquarters staff, left here by automobile to take charge of the relief work.

Seven hundred Cumberland families evacuated from low-lying sections were reported in need of food, clothing and shelter. As many as possible were being taken care of in the State Armory.

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., east of Cumberland, and Hancock, Md., across the river from it, also felt the fury of the rampant Potomac, although not to the extent that Cumberland did.

Between 2 and 3 feet of water were reported in Berkeley Springs.

Over Sea Wall Here.

Here in Washington the river was 2 feet above normal and washed over the sea wall in Potomac Park at high tide. However, the Weather Bureau said that unless more rain should fall than is now foreseen conditions would not be as bad as in 1934, when the river covered Water street.

The Shenandoah River, which joins the Potomac River at Harpers Ferry, also went over its banks, flooding a large part of the rich Shenandoah Valley.

The highways near Winchester were inundated, and motor traffic was at a standstill. Washington-bound buses returned there because of weakened bridges.

From Front Royal came reports of stories and dwellings being flooded and traffic impeded.

Schools were dismissed early in some parts of the valley, and in Winchester alarm over the condition of bridges led school officials to keep 50 children in the school overnight.

Bridge Under Guard.

The main thoroughfare through the Shenandoah Valley, highway No. 11, was closed to traffic at Cedar Creek, 3 miles north of Strasburg. Highway officials were guarding a bridge at that point deemed unsafe for traffic.

A Southern Railway train en route from Washington to Harrisonburg was halted at Strasburg by 5 feet of water in a low point on the line. The train started back for Washington last night.

At the Fishburne Military School at Waynesboro youths swam on the athletic field during the afternoon, using jumping pits for diving pools. The Waynesboro main street was closed to traffic. Homes near the South River, a tributary of the Shenandoah, took on a Venetian atmosphere as residents traveled in boats.

Shenandoah County was without lights and many towns in the county were without telephone service.

Rails Inundated.

A number of families in the eastern section of Lexington abandoned their homes last night when the North River reached 10 feet above normal, pouring over into that residential area. The B. & O. Railroad tracks were inundated. Trains of that line between Lexington and Staunton were interrupted by a landslide near Timber Ridge in Rockbridge County.

Rains changed to snow late yesterday at Norton, and there was a sharp drop in temperature. Eight inches had fallen at 9 p. m.

Tributary streams of the West Virginia Panhandle were reported at Martinsburg last night as overflowing their banks with the heavy rainfall continuing.

Romney, W. Va., in Hampshire County, was isolated last night. The hotel there reported all highways impassable.

At Harpers Ferry the Potomac was beginning to rise, but had not reached a dangerous point. The full effect of the steady rain was expected to be felt today or tomorrow.

At Locust Grove, three miles from Cumberland, water rooftop high forced 100 persons from their homes. Persons reported seeing five cottages washed down Georges Creek with cries for help coming from some of them.

The Associated Press said that at Keyser, W. Va., 75 families evacuated their homes and that residents of Ridgeley, W. Va., across the river from Cumberland, were forced to seek safety in a hill top schoolhouse.

Bridge Washed Away.

The water, rising at more than a foot an hour, late yesterday afternoon stood five feet deep in front of the Fort Cumberland Hotel.

Throughout the area residents in low sections were moving furniture to second stories and preparing to abandon their homes.

At Graces Station on the Romney, W. Va. branch, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad bridge was reported washed away. Between Hyndman and Bedford, Pa., railroad tracks were washed out. Passenger service was discontinued by the Western Maryland Railway Co.

Harrisonburg was without electric power and light last night, with the municipal power plant flooded by the heaviest rainfall since the flood of 1924 there. The city was practically isolated with railroads and highways blocked by washouts and landslides according to the Associated Press.

No trains were able to reach Harrisonburg yesterday over the Chesapeake and Western, Southern or Valley Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio. Several bridges on the C. & W. were partly washed away between Harrisonburg and Elkton while a section of track was washed away near Keezletown.

Families Flee.

Five feet of water stood in the basement of the Harrisonburg Daily News Records' plant.

Residents of Pulaski, Va., were isolated in their homes as water in the streets reached a 3-foot depth. School children were given a holiday when water flooded a schoolhouse boiler room.

Craigsville, Va., saw the greatest flood in a generation as water stood 6 feet deep in an underpass on the Craigsville-Fordwick highway. Bus service was stopped and schools were closed.

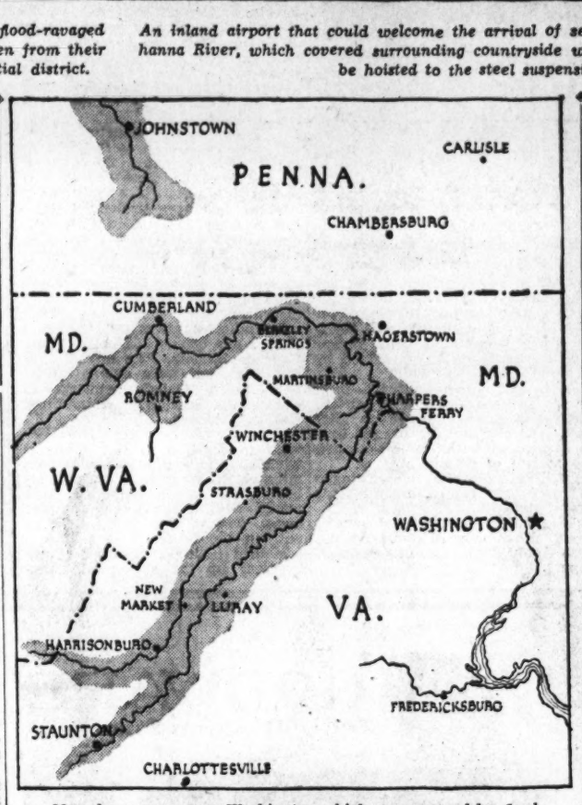
The postoffice at Craigsville was flooded and the postmistress was forced to stand on a table to sort mail. An eastbound Chesapeake & Ohio passenger train was delayed six hours when water poured into a tunnel at Millboro to block both east and west bound traffic on the main line yesterday morning.

Near Buchanan, Va., Purgatory Creek swept over Lee highway for a mile and a half, later subsiding. Observers measured 3.9 inches of rainfall there between 3 a. m. and noon.

In southwest Virginia snow plows were brought out to clear the roads as snow fell to a depth of 6 inches in several sections. At St. Charles, in Lee County, snow was reported 18 inches deep.

In Washington the wind reached a velocity of 45 miles an hour at 2 p. m., according to the Weather Bureau.

Rain will continue today, with much colder weather and the possibility of snow flurries, the Weather Bureau said. The forecast for tomorrow is fair and warmer.



Map shows areas near Washington which are menaced by flood.

Prescott Submits Montgomery Bills

Annapolis, Md., March 17 (AP).—Two local measures for Montgomery County were introduced today by Senator Stedman Prescott (Democrat), of Montgomery.

One would require the county treasurer to make a report of all receipts and disbursements for the year on July 1, 1936, and yearly after that. The report would be submitted to the county accountant for an audit and would be published in two newspapers.

The other would require that lists of delinquent taxpayers be published in two newspapers of the county.

Both bills were referred to a special committee composed of Senators Prescott, Richard S. Dodson (Democrats), of Talbot, and Olin R. Higgins (Democrat), of Dorchester.

Damage Heavy As Gales Lash Southern Area

By the United Press.

Atlanta, Ga., March 17.—Rain and snow-laden gales lashed the deep South tonight while Pennsylvania and Maryland were stricken by damaging floods.

From the Carolinas to the Gulf Coast, heavy March winds sent the mercury tumbling downward, interferred with communications systems and damaged windows and light buildings.

At Greenville, S. C., a gale, carrying sleet and snow, damaged roofs and trees. Power lines were down and a heavy snow was covering the ground northward to the North Carolina line.

At Union, S. C., a 24-hour period brought a heavy electrical storm, sleet, rain and snow. Several inches of snow covered the ground tonight.

The Weather Bureau ordered small craft warnings aloft on the Florida east coast from Key West to West Palm Beach. Northwest storm warnings were hoisted south of Cape Hatteras to Savannah, Ga.

The Guluf Coast near New Orleans and western Florida was hardest hit by gales last night. The steamship Antonis G. Lemos crashed into a New Orleans wharf as the boat was caught in Mississippi cross currents in a 47-mile-an-hour wind.

Damage ran into the thousands of dollars as a heavy wind whipped Atlanta. The mercury dropped 42 degrees overnight.

Johnstown

clerks took to the upper floors and the roof.

She reported motor boat rescuers carried some to safety.

Telephone communication to the building was cut off.

The waters filled downtown streets to a depth variously estimated at between 8 and 20 feet. The crest rose almost to Mercy Hospital, situated on a hill some distance removed from the downtown area.

Second "Johnstown Flood."

Rain continued to fall, while the city remained in darkness, all roads to it under water.

Hotels were reported filled with persons unable to get to high ground before the flood came.

Late in the day thousands of others took refuge in Westmont, a suburb.

Mrs. Barbour, whose husband and son were among those marooned in the store, said old inhabitants who went through the flood of 1889 described the inundation as:

"The second Johnstown flood."

The plant of the Johnstown Tribune and Democrat, daily newspapers, were flooded, along with scores of other buildings.

A young man, Henry Belind, of Beaverdale, drowned at Johnstown after a bridge collapsed while he was crossing Beaver Creek.

Flood waters also engulfed parts of the railroad city of Altoona, east of Johnstown. Between five and eight feet of water covered Mansion Park, an exclusive residential district. Waters also poured through some sections of the downtown district.

Rescue crews carried marooned residents by boat from the second stories of homes in Lakemont, an Altoona suburb.

Motor and rowboats moved over the water-choked William Penn highway—a main East-West highway—rescuing families from homes in the borough of Gaysport.

Other boat crews took children from classrooms earlier in the day at Barnesboro, near Johnstown.

A number of small bridges were washed away by flooded creeks.

Motorists Stalled.

Hundreds of motorists, unable to continue their journeys, sought shelter in crowded hotels. All roads were blocked and train service was halted.

Throughout the western section of the State rain and sleet lashed streams, forcing them over their banks.

In Pittsburgh the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers rose steadily and rivermen said the worst flood in 30 years might come overnight. Some sections of the business district along the Allegheny's bank already were under water.

Across the stream the muddy, rough water lapped within inches of a main line of the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad. Trolley service to the populous suburbs west of Pittsburgh was disrupted by a flooded creek.

Three hundred miners escaped drowning in pits near McClelland-town in Fayette County. Flood waters surged into the mine while they worked. Some said water reached to their waists as they waded through the dark passageways.

Residents of Bellwood, a town of 6,000 population near Altoona, were warned tonight a reservoir above the town "may burst at any moment."

The warning was sounded by officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad, which operates the reservoir jointly with the borough.

Many residents sought refuge with relatives and friends in nearby cities and towns.

Two Feet of Snow Falls.

With the floods came severe snowstorms paralyzing traffic in many localities. At Erie, on the shore of Lake Erie, far from the flood zone, emergency crews went onto the highways in an attempt to restore traffic after a blinding blizzard that buried the roads under 2 feet of snow.

In Pittsburgh the weather bureau predicted a stage of 36 feet—highest since 1907 when waters 9 feet deep flooded parts of the business section. Tonight the river reached the 30-foot level—six over flood stage—and still was rising.

The flood came after an unprecedented thaw of the heaviest snow in years in the mountains of central Pennsylvania. Moderating weather was accompanied by heavy rains.

Many residents were warned this afternoon that a flood was expected and some took to the highlands.

Early in the day the Conemaugh went on rampage at nearby Portage and the flood swept into Johnstown several hours later.

As fresh flood threats sent a Red Cross staff worker hurrying to Portland, Me., Gov. Louis J. Brann, of that State, estimated that loss would amount to $10,000,000.

House to Hear District Relief Appeal Today

Commissioners Face Losing Battle in Plea for More Than $250,000.

Expecting to fight a losing battle, members of the Board of Public Welfare and the District Commissioners are to go before the House Appropriations Committee today to ask for more than $250,000 with which to piece out local relief funds for the balance of the current fiscal year.

The board and the Commissioners had asked for $808,000 as the minimum necessary to carry on relief work. The Bureau of the Budget cut this to $250,000. President Roosevelt, engaged in a national battle over Federal relief appropriations, approved the slash in the local request, despite the fact that all the money is to be paid by District taxpayers.

Representative James P. Buchanan (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, already has told Judge Michael M. Doyle and Dr. Henry Crosson, Welfare Board members, and Commissioner George E. Allen that they had better content themselves with trying to get as much as $250,000. Buchanan told the welfare leaders that "direct relief must stop."

Relief leaders found some hope in a statement by Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, that he was much interested in the local relief situation and was anxious that the District be permitted to spend sufficient of its revenues to insure against actual privation and suffering.

Whether close to 5,000 cases of employables are to be dropped completely from relief rolls will depend on the outcome of the House and Senate action, officials said. The $250,000 proposed additional funds will permit carrying only unemployables after the end of this month.

Analysis of relief figures, according to Elwood Street, director of welfare, showed that cutting off all employables would mean cutting about two-thirds of the total persons now cared for through relief from public aid. The 9,102 cases comprise about 30,000 persons. Of these cases 4,834 are employables. The remaining 4,168 are unemployables. The employables have many more dependents than have the unemployables.

Crowd in Chile Sees Man Kill Wife, Self

Valparaiso, Chile, March 17 (AP).—George Phillips, German citizen, threw approximately 5,000 pesos (about $250) to a clamoring crowd under a hotel balcony today, pushed his wife and daughter off the balcony and jumped off himself.

The wife was killed when she hit the pavement in the scattering crowd which had listened to a long harangue by the former employe of the Chilean Exploration Co. Phillips' 11-year-old daughter suffered minor injuries, and Phillips died in a hospital two hours after his jump.

The crowd, attracted by the German's speech, scurried for hundred-peso notes which Phillips tossed down.

Shortly after his speech was ended, he disappeared from the balcony appearing shortly afterward pushing his wife and daughter before him. With a shove, his wife was propelled from the overhanging platform.

Influenza Is Fatal To Mrs. England

Mrs. Hattie E. England, 60, well-known real estate operator and contractor, died at Emergency Hospital yesterday morning after a month's illness of influenza complicated by a heart ailment.

Mrs. England was a pioneer in developing real estate near Clarendon, Va., and played a large part in planning the Lyon Park and Cherrydale developments in Arlington County.

She was born in Frederick County, Md., and spent her early life there. She moved to Washington in 1912 after her marirage to her cousin, Charles T. England, who survives. Their home is on Columbia pike, in Fairfax County.

Besides her husband, Mrs. England leaves a sister, Imogene England, of Washington, and four brothers, Nathan, Walter, Edward and John England. John lives in Iowa, while the other brothers are residents of Maryland.

Funeral services will be held in Gawler's funeral home at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. Burial, which will be private, will take place in Fairfax Cemetery.

cent years—the suspension of permits for first-offense speed convictions.

The court has been asked to restrain the Commissioners from suspending licenses in all future cases. The request was contained in a petition filed by Calvin Hartman, 1356 Sheridan street northwest. His permit was suspended after a speed conviction and through Attorney H. Mason Welch he is seeking restoration of his right to drive.

To Rule in Few Days.

Welch, in arguments before Justice Jesse Adkins, described the suspension rule as unconstitutional because its permitted an "assumption of delegated legislative powers by an administrative board." Justice Adkins took the plea under advisement, indicating he would hand down a ruling within a few days.

Coincident with Van Duzer's announcement of improved traffic conditions, Thomas Lodge, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, speaking as a member of the Commissioners' traffic committee, pointed out that among recent recommendations presented to the House Traffic sub-committee were ones dealing with strict law enforcement.

"There are many existing regulations and existing theories of traffic control which, it would seem, would solve many of the problems. It is observed that there is either an insufficient desire to enforce or an insufficient enforcement of these regulations and theories," said Lodge.

Scores Lack of Funds.

He scored lack of funds for an adequate police personnel and urged an increased appropriation for additional policemen, and continued:

"Some months ago, in a report to the Commissioners, I pointed out that there is little, if any, efforts to teach members of the police department, including the traffic bureau, to enforce common sense rules of driving."

"It is observed that notwithstanding the difficulties encountered by enforcement officers in dealing with so-called privileged motorists, there is not an enforcement of existing regulations and a good deal of the difficulty now encountered could be met if the regulations were enforced," Lodge declared.

As an example of what proper training can accomplish, Lodge cited the group of "rookie" policemen assigned to assist in vehicular and pedestrian traffic during the Christmas rush period.

"It only pointed out what can be done by proper instruction of officers in traffic matters and by proper supervision. It is commendable that young policemen are being taught to use their judgment and to follow a uniform practice of manual control. Other officers assigned to traffic work would benefit by training in the police school.

Lodge also struck at present methods of permit issuance, declaring that greater care should be taken toward uncovering physical defects in motorists who are driving on permits obtained within the three-year operating limit.

"Frequently, physical defects develop after issuance of a permit and the issuing official knows nothing about it. Police should be instructed to keep on the lookout for these cases and report them to the traffic director for investigation," Lodge said.

Board Revokes 2 Auto Permits; 23 Suspended

The permits of two motorists convicted of speeding were revoked and 23 other licenses were suspended for 15 to 45 days yesterday by the board of revocations.

Those who lost their permits are Norman R. Gibbons, 920 Fourteenth street southeast, 50 miles, and John W. Gray, 1320 G street, northeast, 56 miles, second offense.

Devolve, Riverdale, Md., 44 miles; Harold M. Dudley, Chevy Chase, Md., 40 miles; William M. Edwards, 5151 Franklin street northeast, 35 miles, second offense; William P. Mexican Troops Guard Strike-Paralyzed City

Guadalajara, Mexico, March 17 (AP).—Troops tonight patrolled the streets of this city, Mexico's second largest, after a 24-hour general strike had suspended all business and industry.

Workers were protesting the killing of two men in a dairy strike clash.

No traffic was allowed to move, water and electricity were shut off, no food could be bought. This caused considerable suffering, as the strike was called without previous notice and residents had no opportunity to buy provisions.

Milk trucks entering the city were stopped and their contents dumped. There were several minor disorders before troops were called out. The shutdown is scheduled to be lifted tomorrow.

(Guadalajara has a population of 175,000.)

Cherry Blossom Festival Plans Are Furthered

Civic Leaders, Hazen Agree Upon 3-Day Program Next Month.

Washington will celebrate officially the blooming of its world-famed Japanese cherry blossoms next month, it was agreed at a meeting of business and civic organizations with Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen yesterday.

Date of the three-day festival at which the blooms are to be welcomed will depend on the opening of the flowers, Hazen said. The date would be announced as soon as the National Capital Parks Service can accurately forecast the day on which the double blossoms will arrive.

About 500,000 visitors are expected in the city during the festival. There will be parades, a grand ball, a horse show, a sun-rise ceremoney under the cherry trees and other events.

Claude W. Owens was appointed by Hazen as general chairman. Vice chairmen include Admiral Cary T. Grayson, Robert V. Fleming, Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, Edward W. Martin, John Saul, Ford Young, Marvin H. McIntyre and Stephen T. Early. Robert J. Cottrell, secretary of the Board of Trade, is general secretary. Lanier P. McLachlen is treasurer.

Mrs. Patterson is chairman of the committee to arrange the grand ball. Maj. Gen. Leon B. Kromer, chief of cavalry, will be in charge of horse show arrangements.

Lieut.-A. J. Bargagni, of the fire department, will have charge of a night parade of military units and floats entered by business and civic organizations and individuals. Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, was named chairman of the public order committee; C. Melvin Sharpe, decorations, and Harold Allen Long, entertainment. Mrs. E. K. Peeples, of the Community Center, will have charge of a gathering of school children in Japanese costumes, designed as a tribute to Japan.

Associated Press Loses Labor Complaint Move

New York, March 17 (AP).—Federal Judge William Bondy today denied the Associated Press an injunction against the National Labor Relation Board in connection with a complaint that the press association violated the labor relations act in the discharge of Morris Watson, a reporter, last October.

The Associated Press had sought to restrain the board from proceeding with the complaint on the ground that it was being subjected to injury and that the act was unconstitutional. At the same time it denied charges in the complaint that Watson was dismissed because of his activities in the American Newspaper Guild.

Adjusted Compensation.

Following much discussion about the rise of an anti-military spirit in the colleges, there comes—with one of those sudden blasts whereby truth so frequently overthrows error—a most heartening demonstration of sacrificial love of country. We refer to the patriotic action of the group of Princeton students who have started an intercollegiate association of Veterans of Future Wars. Here is a movement which should spread far beyond the auxiliary of potential gold star mothers already forming at Vassar.

Of course, the V. of F. W. is in its infancy; it leaves many details still to be determined. The questions of artistic forage caps, suitable magazine, and procedure for national conventions are vital. The problem of an able lobby is paramount. Nevertheless, the benefits of the association must be immediately evident, and, on the principle that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, existing prototypes should welcome the disciple. Certainly almost every bonus argument advanced by the veterans' lobby can be applied by these gallant preveterans, who are willing to spend their "adjusted compensation" not merely before it falls due, but even before the war on which it is contingent comes into being.

Despite all the attacks of pacifists, the heart—and the humor—of the country's colleges remains in the right place. These stern youths know what they are facing. They have seen as much of wars-to-come as many a present beneficiary saw of the late world conflict. But the competition is a little tough on the Townsendites, unless they are shrewd enough to revise their program to demand prepayment of pensions to those who in due course may be expected to reach the age of 60.

Subsidies And Politics.

Plans of the renovized AAA to distribute approximately $400,000,000 among farmers shortly before election day do not necessarily mean that the agricultural administrators of the New Deal are working hand in hand with Party Chieftain Farley. Administrator Davis told a House sub-committee that checks would probably start flowing farmward again in August or September. Payments for growing soil conservation crops could not be reasonably made before harvesting begins, for it is necessary to determine whether farmers have complied with the requirements for this subsidy. On the other hand, it might be unreasonable from the farmers' viewpoint to delay the distribution until winter.

Charges that the AAA is planning to use the enormous sum at its disposal for the promotion of partisan interests cannot, therefore, be accepted at face value. Politics may have played no part in the formulation of the plans to carry out the will of Congress. Nevertheless, the new farm program as now outlined will very definitely tend to line up the farmer vote for the New Deal. The very fact that $400,000,000 is to move into the pockets of the farmers at the psychological moment is certain to influence the result of the election, regardless of what motives may have stimulated that movement.

The issue which arises out of the new farm benefit program is not one of directly buying votes. It is not as simple as that. Rather it is a matter of influencing large groups of voters by lavish expenditure of public funds in their behalf. The poll revealed this week by the Institute of Public Opinion shows that President Roosevelt derives a large part of his strength from two classes that have been highly favored by Federal spending. Of the people on relief who replied to the institute's queries, 78 per cent favor the return of Mr. Roosevelt to the White House. Farmers voted for him by a majority of 57 per cent.

The dangers inherent in this tendency are patent. If the rival parties attempt to create good will among economic pressure groups through the spending of money in their behalf, politics in this country will descend to the level of a contest in profligacy. Merely to protest against the time of making such payments is to overlook the grave significance of extensive subsidies in a democracy. Extraordinary measures are essential in times of emergency, but if willingness to continue supporting millions of citizens out of the public treasury becomes a criterion of candidates' popularity, our entire governmental system will be endangered.

When Congressmen attempt to influence the AAA to send an avalanche of benefit checks into their home districts at a strategic moment, no one can doubt that the Administration's spending policy has become a sinister influence in politics. The time is rapidly approaching when the payment of enormous subsidies will have to be considered from their political as well as their economic consequences.

A Miserable Deception.

If President Roosevelt is wise he will not attempt to slide over the relief problem with any more easy generalities in his forthcoming message to Congress on that subject. For the time has come when a definite accounting on the whole crazy-quilt patchwork should be given by those responsible. And the logical moment for such an accounting is now that some huge additional sum is to be requested to follow the billions of other people's money already tossed away by Harry Hopkins and his auxiliaries.

Nobody can any longer be blind to the depths of asininity to which the WPA program has now sunk. There have been plenty of illustrations of fatuous boondoggling heretofore. But when Federal funds are spent to pay the unemployed to broadcast sheer idiocies, a new low in national degeneracy has been attained. Over the air on Monday night, under the auspices of the Federal Office of Education of all agencies, WPA "workers" asked each other: "Do you think a croquette ever makes a good wife?" This moronic dialogue, it must be understood, is in the minds of its sponsors calculated to "build up morale" among those inflicting it on the airways.

The farcical aspect of much of this boondoggling would itself encourage revolt on the part of any self-respecting people. But the WPA does not stop with the promulgation of cheerful idiocies. It does not even stop with destroying the structure of local self-government, and with filling States, counties and cities with bureaucracies of bungling incompetents. It does not stop with tacit encouragement to widespread graft and corruption. Beyond all this the incredible carnival which has Mr. Hopkins as chief jongleur is operating to sap the fiber and undermine the very basis of national vigor. And what objective it aims to achieve no man, even among its directors, seems able to say. It can scarcely be argued that the more abundant life is notably furthered when the Federal Office of Education sets out to inquire: "How many feet in a Scotland Yard?"

Throughout the length and breadth of this country there is scarcely a person who cannot name one or more utterly useless projects sponsored by the WPA. There are very few who of their own experience do not know individuals who have learned to loaf at Government expense in preference to making any endeavor to support themselves. These conditions stand out with no investigation or inquiry of any kind. What a thorough probe into the WPA would be likely to reveal surpasses imagination.

Beyond creating a permanent class of idlers, and undertakings as definitely undesirable as the abominable vandalism underway in Lafayette Square here in Washington, the achievement of these relief projects is pitifully small. It has done nothing tangible to increase permanent employment. It has not, even at the cost of billions, removed all the employables from the relief rolls. It has hampered, instead of forwarding, intelligent unemployment relief. But this grandiose buffoonery has successfully debauched the self-respect of the American people, and piled up huge debts for the forces of recovery to surmount.

Here in the District is now revealed a very fair sample of the tangible accomplishment of WPA. In spite of all that was said about work relief there are today more able-bodied people than unemployables on the local relief rolls. Throughout the country the same picture is revealed. Four billions have been thrown away or pledged in a single year and the President is about to ask Congress for more money to follow what has already gone down the sewer. Yet for all this saturnalia very few accomplishments of unquestionable permanent value can be found on the credit side of the ledger.

On the contrary: from Wisconsin, from Missouri, from New York and elsewhere come reports of WPA strikes—calculating efforts to make relatively worthless outlays still more costly and demoralizing. Here is perhaps the most dangerous symptom of the entire fantasia. Under New Deal inspiration thinly-disguised doles have come to be regarded not merely as a right, but as a right the measure of which shall be determined by organized minorities.

In all this orgy the Hopkins outfit has not contributed one single new idea to the practice of unemployment relief. Indeed it has confined itself to repeating blunders which, at least since the collapse of the French national workshops in 1848, have been ridiculed by every serious student of the subject. What has been accomplished is the wasting of billions, and postponement of that systematic approach to the problem which now cannot be much longer delayed.

Until some rational long-range plan of unemployment relief has been presented by the Administration it would be folly for the national legislature to grant further license to an organization as incompetent, as constructively futile, and as insidiously dangerous as the WPA has proved itself. On the contrary, Congress should make a thorough investigation of present relief "policies" a prerequisite to any consideration of further grants calculated to prolong the miserable deception which for too long has been practiced on the American people.

The Play's The Thing.

New York producers of so-called "legitimate" drama have announced that hereafter Washington will be looked upon as a "two-week stand" for the better plays and revues. This comes as a belated recognition of the faithfulness of local theatergoers to the living drama throughout the depression. Too long have the Broadway powers that be estimated this city's value as a show-window for their wares purely on a basis of population, number of operating theaters and seating capacity. Customarily these are reliable yardsticks. Washington is the exception that proves the rule.

It has been repeatedly demonstrated here, during the past three seasons, to seek no further, that theatrical productions of the first rank will fill to capacity our single legitimate theater throughout the eight performances of a week. On such occasions almost the equivalent of an average week's receipts must be returned by the box-office because no seats remain to be sold. More often than not, these attractions have gone on to extended runs in other cities where receipts have been less in the first week than they would have been here in the second.

Not only is Washington the best "show town" in America, outside of New York, but by virtue of the huge pay roll of the Federal establishment, it possesses the greatest per capita buying power of any city in the country. These are factors that should have been recognized in New York by making the Capital a two-week stand years ago.

Moreover, Washington is also entitled, as soon as productional activity receives a sufficient impetus, to become at least a two-theater city. With dramatic production during the past seven years at the lowest ebb it has reached in the last half century, it has been a difficult task to book even a single theater through anything approaching a solid season. That condition seems in course of being gradually overcome. When it is, Washington should be the first city outside New York to take advantage of the increased output of drama, musical comedy, operetta and revue of the first grade.

It is an encouraging sign, at least, that the theatrical tycoons who wield control of the traditional theater are at last beginning to appreciate the potentialities of the Capital of the Nation. Already theater-minded, it is ready, nay eager, to be the belwether in leading the theater back to something of its former prosperous state.

"The Boys."

At least the Mr. Smith, whose business in Washington as a representative of various Western railroads and utilities is now being probed by the Senate Lobby Committee, did not say "the bhoys." This is some progress. It means that a certain crudeness has been eliminated from the American political scene.

Time was in the history of the land when "the bhoys" was the only word to describe the parties to dealings by which legislators and lobbyists worked out their not too separate fortunes. But now, no longer. The six Congressmen invited by Mr. Smith to share his summer quarters are described by him as "the boys"—polished and quite unaspirated. Regardless of pronunciation, however, the easy familiarity connoted by the phrase remains.

No man who has to spend a summer in Washington would begrudge his buddies the privilege of moving to a cool house, and it is emphasized that the quarters rented by Mr. Smith and the six Congressmen were cool above all else. Notwithstanding, there are certain responsibilities a man assumes in accepting public office that outrank physical comfort, and one of them is the maintenance of integrity beyond even the breath of suspicion.

It would be naive to assume that none of the co-habitant Congressmen knew of Mr. Smith's assignment in Washington. In fact, Mr. Smith has admitted a belief that "some of them knew of it." That being the case, the Congressmen showed a woeful lack of discretion in agreeing to share anything with him. They are now paying the price. Mr. Smith refers to them publicly as "the boys." The unfortunate implication is that they encouraged the soft impeachment.

New Refinancing Plan.

From the Dallas Morning News.

Secretary Morgenthau refuses to tell why he has adopted a new plan of refinancing, involving the borrowing on March 15 of $559,000,000, which will not be needed until April 15. Since this procedure will call for payment of double interest on $559,000,000 for one month, there must be a very good reason. Several guesses have been made by financial experts, the most logical of which is the guess that Morgenthau sees the peak of borrowing a short distance ahead, due to the soldiers' bonus and other large expenditures of the present session of Congress, and wants to get as much of the routine refinancing as possible out of the way.

Morgenthau knows simply that Congress, despite its talk of taxation, is going to do little to balance the budget at this pre-election session and is wisely making plans to borrow the money as advantageously as possible. Undoubtedly the financing will be carried through without a hitch, so there is nothing to worry about for the present. Yet it is a condition that calls for more serious consideration than the Government's financial problem at this time last year.

Reply To Mr. Pinchot.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Gov. Pinchot's letter in The Post of March 16 I read with almost literal approval, although, as a former Republican Governor with Mr. Pinchot, I arrive in my reasoning at a different conclusion than he, since I understand that he intends to vote for whoever the Republicans nominate as their candidate for President, while I do not.

One hundred per cent right is our Progressive former Governor when he writes this: "Since '32 the Nation's thinking has progressed. Today the rights of men, women and children to protection and security in their daily lives are more widely acknowledged than they ever were before. Millions of people have been given recognition and assistance they never knew before. To take account of those who need help and deserve it is not only expedient but right."

"Since 1932 the Nation's thinking has progressed." Why? Why has our thinking progressed? Why did it not progress in the four years under President Hoover? There can be only one answer, and that answer is, because since 1932 we have had a progressive leader in President Roosevelt, a leader who gave the things Gov. Pinchot says the people demand, namely, "Security in their daily lives—" "as never before," "recognition" and "assistance they never knew before." These are the essence of the New Deal, as I see it.

What reason, except party regularity, is there why we should seek to defeat the leader who is doing what the Governor thinks a Republican leader should do? I can see no good reason, even if the Republican Party should nominate such a man. And there is very little chance that they will do so.

The Advantage Of Helium.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The dirigible being complex to most of our people, it is unavoidable that differences of opinion should arise as to whether construction of airships is practical. Actual performance provides a means to judge these disputes. But it seems to be one of the peculiarities of human nature that even in the face of conclusive proof of a disputed question many people who have doubted will continue to doubt. The large majority of our citizens are fair-minded, and as a matter of pride will insist that the United States carry on.

This situation will be brought about with the visit of Germany's L.Z. 129. America, being America, the friendly challenge of this great German ship will create such interest that our further participation in lighter-than-air construction will be greatly speeded.

It can not be overemphasized that our monopoly of helium, the only safe lifting gas, gives us an advantage which must not be overlooked. Relinquishing this field after gaining hard-won knowledge would not only be un-American, but like surrendering with success in sight. JOHN W. HIGGINS.
New York City, March 16.

Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some weeks ago, The Post carried a very interesting article entitled "Equal Justice Under Law," in which the punishment meted to two white boys was contrasted with the experience of a young colored boy.

The Committee on Race Relations of the Federation of Churches wishes to thank you for publishing these facts. Such a policy on the part of your paper cannot help but contribute to better racial understanding. MARGARET E. JONES.

Planning For The Future.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In Sunday's Town Hall address Mr. Albert Edwin Wiggam stated that city dwellers of the cultured class are dying out because they have too few children. This leads us to consider the effect of city planning on suburban residences of city workers.

The writer moved his family to the suburbs over 20 years ago. The effect on the health of my children was miraculous. But the average man moves along the line of least resistance and will not seek a residence in the wide open spaces unless an easily accessible means of communication presents itself.

Here in Washington the Federal Government can accomplish this in part by constructing the next Federal buildings so that the employes can walk to the Washington Terminal and use the suburban transportation facilities of the railways entering this terminal.

In the neighboring States of Maryland and Virginia are thousands of acres of high, well-drained land near these railways where city workers can buy home plots of one or more acres. In their spare time they can cultivate a garden, raise fruit trees and poultry and earn a profit from their out-of-doors gymnasium. The culture of flowers in their yards will develop an aesthetic taste and make them better citizens.

On Capitol Hill near the Washington Terminal, facing the Capital plaza, is land enough for several very large buildings. This would be in accord with the policy of the Government in seeking to group its buildings so that it could control the area and divorce it from the remainder of the city if such a future necessity should arise. No concrete pillars would be required for foundations on Capitol Hill and hence on several buildings here located millions of dollars could be saved.

Teletype machines and pneumatic tube conveyors can supply communications with the buildings in the "triangle."

As the commuters would have no parking problem, the city would be saved the cost of the proposed municipal garages. Other large cities use the railway for suburban transportation and these city workers reach their suburban homes, as much as 30 miles away, in less than one hour's travel.

The high cost of rents for both business and residential property is due to the concentration of the Federal buildings in one area, and the employes seeking the nearest available home. If the Government spreads out its buildings, it creates new business areas and new suburban communities and hence by competition the cost of housing will be reduced.

We know vested interests have great influence but these problems should be solved with the welfare of the greatest numbers in view.

HOWARD D. WOODSON.
Washington, March 17.

The New AAA.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Secretary Wallace should be compelled to retract a recent utterance—"The biggest legalized steal in history." Is not the Government "morally obligated" to return every penny of this vast sum to the consumer?

The new AAA simply shoos the devil around the bush. There is about as much difference between tweedledum and tweedledee.

A tax on food and raiment is a tax on the necessaries of life and is wholly indefensible, no matter what purpose the money is used for. L. G. HIGGINS.

The Physicians' Share.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since there has been so much adverse criticism regarding Representative Blanton, I am writing to ask if you will please give both sides of the question.

It may be that the lack of hospital facilities has not been exaggerated, but it would be well for the public to get at the bottom of the matter and place the blame directly where it belongs. More thought should be given to cause than to effect. If physicians would take the time to study each case, there would be less sickness and fewer deaths.

William Jennings Bryan's Birthday.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "The deeds of men live after them," quoth Emerson and so the birthday of William Jennings Bryan, March 19, 1860, will be celebrated at the Lafayette Hotel tomorrow night, where he stopped when in the city during the latter part of his life. Not many of his old friends and admirers are still in the land of the living but it is a foregone conclusion that those who are will be present to honor the memory of the greatest constructive statesman the world ever produced on economic questions.

The writer was privileged to intimately know this God-fearing Christian man from the time he reported his tariff speech on the floor of the House of Representatives in 1892 for the Associated Press as well as his silver speech in 1893 until his death.

Nearly every piece of constructive legislation the Commoner ever advocated in the interest of humanity is today a law or an amendment to the Constitution, namely: the income tax; the election of Senators by the people; prohibition; the guarantee of bank deposits which was the paramount issue of his campaign for the Presidency in 1908; imperialism or the emancipation of the Philippines; the recently enacted banking and currency system dominated by a Government board appointed by the President, as well as, when Secretary of State his negotiation of 29 peace treaties with foreign nations outlawing war. He told the writer that he was on the point of signing one of these with Germany when the World War broke out.

And almost simultaneously with his birthday comes the news of the practical scrapping of the Versailles Treaty with the League of Nations Covenant which the Senate rejected in 1919 because of the objectionable Article X, which President Wilson insisted should be ratified without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t". His insistence that it should be incorporated in the Democratic national convention platform at San Francisco in 1920 at which Cox was nominated practically split the party. Bryan and the progressive wing of the party protested against this plank because it gave Great Britain practical control of the League of Nations which could inveigle the United States into any European war in the future. He refused to support Cox in the campaign because of this plank, announcing when appealed to for support, that "his heart was in the grave" and he was the worst defeated candidate who ever ran for the Presidency up to that time. Also his resignation from the Cabinet as Secretary of State as a protest against this country going into the war.

But his biggest issue, bimetalism or the remonetization of silver, is in the offing and the writer predicts that before his next birthday the world will be on a bimetalic money basis which will forever end recurring or so-called cyclical depressions. On the subject of silver let me quote his prophetic words after his return to Lincoln, Nebr., following his so-called defeat for the Presidency in 1896:

You may think that you have buried the cause of bimetalism; you may congratulate yourselves that you have laid the free coinage of silver away in a sepulcher, newly made since election, and before the door rolled the veto stone. But, sirs, if our cause is just, as I believe it is, your labor has been in vain; no tomb was ever made so strong that it could imprison a righteous cause. Silver will lay aside its grave clothes and its shroud. It will rise again and in its rising and in its reign will bless mankind."

It is impossible for one in any age to properly appraise a statesman's worth to his fellowman during the time of his social and political activities since it takes time to prove their effectiveness, but if service in the interest of humanity is the measure of greatness, as above pointed out, Bryan, if living today, would be the most acclaimed man since the time of Christ. History will so record it.

The Post Impressionist

"Art Of Arts—To Dine"

Post Office, Wednesday.

JUDGE JOSEPH DANZIGER has at last handed down his decision upon "The Delectable Dinner." Although he criticizes Sir Nicholas Grattan-Doyle's criticism of the menus offered by the British Wine and Food Society and the English Saintsbury Club, the Column's table expert holds no great opinion of those repasts; but—silent as he remains concerning Miss Jeanette MacDonald's Hollywood regalement—he does suggest a meal that is, as to viands, a hundred per cent American. Harken to him:

"A Shah of Persia, visiting Britain, was puzzled by his hosts' excitement over the Derby, because, said he, 'everyone knows that one horse can run faster than another. But I mustn't quarrel with Sir Nicholas' contention that the Roast Beef of Old England is indispensable to a 'delectable dinner.' Indeed, considering the reception given, at a London club, to a playful remark of mine anent that British (and American) standby, the subject inspires timidity. I admitted that the R. B. of O. E. was superb—and added that the best examples came from the Chicago stockyards. The subsequent frigid silence almost drove me out on my ear.

"So I shall merely say of Sir Nicholas that, while roast beef is peerless, its place at a formal dinner is as questionable as would be his own Irish Stew—known as such in every civilized nation, but never exactly the same in two adjacent towns, and yet excellent in all forms. If, on his next trip to Chicago, he wangles an invitation to the Saddle and Sirloin Club, we shall hear no more from him about the R. B. of O. E. . . .

"Neither the menu of the British Wine and Food Society nor that of the English Saintsbury Club is outstandingly exciting or English, except as to the turbot and whitebait: turbot is not everyman's dish, but whitebait is Britannia's supreme contribution to gastronomy—it should be eaten by the hatful. If, however, England cannot produce an all-British menu, why shouldn't we try our hands at an American bill-of-fare—except for the drinks?

"In revered American fashion, we start with oysters: eight Cotuits and no cocktail sauce, please! Let everyone damage his oysters to suit his taste: for me, one drop of Tabasco per oyster washed off with a squeeze of lemon—nothing more—and with this a thimbleful of saki, or a glass of vodka should the Soviets let us have the matured article.

"I'll skip the soup. I am not much of a super.

"Next will come Red Snapper a la Creole, or Kennebec Salmon with a tart white sauce. As the Rhine and the Scottish lakes share with the Kennebec a monopoly of prime salmon, let's stick to the snapper: so far as I know, no continent except ours provides it. And the wine will be Presporter, 1911.

"The entrement is a thin slice of Smithfield Ham, with a puree of chestnuts garnished by spiced pears. Come on, you Irish and Westphalians and Pragers, and try to equal a razor-back from Virginia! It is escorted by a Bischofsberger Auslese, 1914.

"Then the Roast. Since this country knows nothing about how good mutton can be, we dare not serve lamb, especially if there be a European guest at table. Saddle of veal supreme, is German—so that's out. If we could smuggle some prairie chicken into Washington, the problem would be solved, but partridge would probably come easier—failing which, turkey: one bird to each six or eight persons.

"By air mail we have giant asparagus, cut before dawn in Holland, Mich.—the only place in America to get asparagus equal to the Germans'—and Chicago usually gobbles all of it. Wine: Chateau Lafitte, 1917, if there's any to be had for gold or good words.

"Should salad be necessary, let it be native: avocado and fruit, with an oil and lemon dressing.

"For the sweet, pie has my ballot. Yes, laugh—damn you! Pie is strictly American and can be the most gorgeous sweet known to man. If it were indigenous to any other country, there would have been odes and sonnets written, ages ago, to pie.

"And why anything more?

"After that, nobody will be in a condition to care for the cheese and dessert that the ladies insist upon dumping on the board.

"Except, of course, in the matter of the last drink—and there I differ with you, my dear Post-Impressionist: I say Port!

"It is true that there is not much real port to be had. The British Royal Family and the dukes get just about all there is—though there's a little now and then left over for the more influential earls. However, I know a place in Poultry, London, where you can get a tawny thirty-odd years' old, in a crusty bottle, with——"

But that's as far as we've read in Judge Danziger's opinion. After all, this is the Lenten season.

Fair Enough

Pigeons And Moochers.

Paris, March 17.

FURTHER observation of the habits of church pigeons on the capitals of the Old World confirms your correspondent's earlier impression that the pigeon is a panhandler by nature, a congenital charity case lacking the jaunty independence of the sparrow and the starling's driving industry and self-respect. The pigeon is partial to cathedrals, but he also hangs around the lesser churches to which the tourists come, and his tactics and psychology resemble those of the old time Bowery mission stiff, a type of moocher who was held in contempt by the more enterprising bums, who soaped their eyes to make them weep and swathed their heads in bandages stained with red ink for tragic effect.

The mission stiff made a practice of hanging around the little hallelujah missions in the evenings, drowsing and grunting like the pigeons of St. Mark's, St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey and soaking up heat from the pot-bellied stove, while better men were standing on their crutches in the draughty tunnels of the subway entrances earning an honest dollar by respectable moochery. At the signal from the missionary, who might be a fallen bartender or a professional ex-convict who had suddenly seen the light and turned to the service of the Lord, the mission stiffs would arouse themselves, fall to their knees on the dirty floor, sobbing and shaking in their rags, and address themselves loudly to the throne of mercy and charity, howling that their poor frailties might be forgiven and, incidentally, that heaven somehow would provide. The signal from the missionary synchronized with the appearance at the street door of a party of slummers from uptown or out of town.

Your correspondent does not pretend to be the keeper of his brother's conscience and would not accuse the mission stiff of insincerity, except that in those days your correspondent enjoyed a rather extensive acquaintance on the Bowery and knew that the mission stiff was a rank professional.

FOR this reason the stiff was held in contempt by the sparrows and starlings of the craft. He sang and prayed and repented at a word of command from the missionary in return for his supper and a refuge from the cold, and the missionary got the donations, from which he paid the rent and the mess bills. He hadn't the gumption to get out and hustle, but, like the cathedral pigeon, figured that if he hung around in surroundings which were more or less churchly he would be fed by hand.

His outcries, too, sounded the same mournful note, and, like the pigeon, he enjoyed a protection which he did not deserve. The police would pick up active bums and the judges would fine away their honest revenues in court, but the mission was hallowed ground in the eyes of the law. The church pigeon is fat and lazy, and hungry people could catch him easily for eating purposes if they dared, but although sparrows and other honest fowl are considered fair game in many parts of Europe, the church pigeon apparently enjoys complete immunity.

He is sometimes used as a symbol over altars and in church architecture, and, of course, he is a familiar figure on Christmas cards and funeral wreaths—a tradition which confers upon him the privileges of a sacred cow. Your correspondent has taken the trouble to observe the conduct of church pigeons in London, Munich and Vienna at moments when there were no tourists in sight and has discovered that their conduct when off duty, so to speak, is quite similar to that of the mission stiff.

• • • •

THEY tuck themselves away in odd corners of the masonry, puff out their feathers and go to sleep rumbling and growling in their dreams until some instinct tells them suckers are in sight with little bags of cracked corn which are sold by peddlers who seem to be in partnership with the pigeons.

At that they come swooping down—these lazy, hypocritical symbolic stiffs—to coo the pigeon talk equivalent of "Thee" and "Thou" and "Hallelujah!" and fill themselves on handouts while the sparrows and the starlings are out hustling for their living.

And your correspondent had a fox terrier once that used to spend too much of his time hanging around Kennedy's saloon at night, mooching bologna and liverwurst off the free lunch counter. There was ground for suspecting that he also bummed a few saucers of beer, because he would come home late and sleep until noon and on many days seemed to be suffering from hangover until evening, when he would go back to Kennedy's saloon.

He had a good home and was a barfly and a bum by choice. Still, it was more decent of him to hang around Kennedy's saloon than to pick out some church, as pigeons do all over the world, and impose on the nobler feelings of the tourists with an implied pretense of sanctity.

Midwest Returns From Soil Conservation Meetings Cynical About Election Day Payments And Shuddering At Red Tape.

By Hilding Siversen.

Special Correspondence of the Post.

Omaha, Nebr.

THOSE who have returned from the various regional conferences on the new Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment act are still scratching their heads and wondering how much deeper the agriculture of the United States can sink into the morass of bureaucracy.

One intelligent visitor at the Chicago conference returned and made a report of 30 typewritten pages, or about 10,000 words, to interested persons, and even then the matter wasn't cleared up, for there was such a maze of verbiage about permanent pasture, rotated cropland, soil-conserving base, conversion payments, crop maintenance payments, erosion practices, work sheets, certificates of performances, county ratios, etc., that the explanations only served to make the whole scheme more obscure than ever.

One of the chief concerns of the regional conference was how the payments are to be made to the farmers. In fact, it might be inferred that the primary purpose of the act, since there is no present emergency requiring artificial stimulus to farm crop prices, is to distribute $47,000,000 before November 1, 1936, which, by a strange coincidence, is close to election day.

• • • •

A SECONDARY purpose in the new act seems to be to find funds to retain the services of the vast army of employes that was set up for the old AAA. As a matter of fact the job-hungry ones have taken on new hope, for here are some of the little things proposed by Chicago conference committees to work into the bureaucracy of the new AAA:

A registration system involving membership in a county soil conservation committee, to be joined by each individual farmer.

A Work Sheet to relate just what each individual farmer is doing with his land.

A Certificate of Performance and Application for Grant.

The work sheet would include: Identification, such as number, name, address, acreage, location, etc.; basic data recommended by the group and approved by the secretary; a map of the land involved; necessary statements regarding the conservation program for the farm for the present and future; affirmation that statements are correct; adjustment by the association.

The Certificate of Performance would include: A statement of such facts regarded necessary by the Secretary; application for payment; certification by the association that statements are correct.

All the recommendations as to these minutiae were sent to Washington for correlation and approval, and the Department of Agriculture is now wrestling desperately, against time, with the huge mass of material.

One of the chief concerns is to avoid the appearance of a contract, since that might invite invalidation by the courts, because of the recent Supreme Court decision, on the ground of coercion.

THERE are innumerable complications arising from regional and soil-type differences. For instance, if a farmer on good corn land converts to soil-conserving crops, he would be paid a higher rate than the man on poorer cornland, under the proposed set-up. Farmers in the semi-arid regions can not grow the soil-conserving crops, as a rule, and may find themselves protected entirely from the "gentle rain of checks."

There is a vast amount of complexity resulting from the necessity of establishing county averages of soil-conserving crops as related to soil-depleting crops. According to the proposed plan, a farmer whose farm contains a smaller or larger ratio of soil-conserving crops than the county average is put into Group A or Group B, depending upon the circumstances. This is his introduction to conservation. By the time he gets through with his experience, he will take almost anybody's word for anything.

All this complexity is grist for the mill of the boys who are facile in the use of slide-rule and logarithm tables—in fact, the working out of the abstruse mathematical problems resulting from the ratios of rotated crops to soil-depleting crops, and the special cases of blue-grass pasture or soy-beans as related to cornland subject to erosion, especially if a corner of the cornfield is occupied by a patch of walnut trees or winter onions, should result in many a hard-working swivel-chair agriculturist burning the midnight kilowatts of South Ag for many a week. Presumably the government soil experts and surveyors will be required to go on the individual farm and see just what's what, and how. Then the local conservation association will have something to say. And when all is done, there may be some arguments as between the associations of one section of the country and the associations of another section. In fact the arguments have already begun.

THE basic reason for weakness in the whole elaborate program, of course, is that conservation is too big and comprehensive a problem to be solved by attack on individual farms. It is a national problem of balanced land use, and that highly important and inclusive factor has been virtually ignored. It would be far simpler, in fact, to employ the national land-use approach, but that approach will not be employed, because a few pressure groups stand in the way.

For instance, there are over 200,000,000 acres of Government grazing lands, and on only a fraction of this area does the Government receive rent. That rent amounts to 2.4 cents per acre. At least 20,000,000 acres of this Government land is badly needed right now to protect certain forms of wild life from total extinction, and it is certain that at least 100,000,000 more acres ought to be retired from use in order to stop wind erosion and severe depletion.

The Government grazing land really competes with crop land, for if crop land is changed to pasture it will be necessary to put livestock on that pasture and thereby the balance may be destroyed. Where will the livestock come from? Where is the market for all this livestock?

Then there are other millions of acres which have been ill-advisedly drained or irrigated, and other millions of acres of marginal land now in private hands which could be bought at a few dollars an acre. The $500,000,000 would go a long distance if used in a program of permanent and balanced conservation.

There is no assurance that the form of conservation employed under the new farm act will be permanent. It may be only a "shot in the arm," for the crop land that is put into bluegrass or clover one year, with benefits paid, may be plowed up and put into corn again next year, or three years hence, if the price of corn seems attractive.

• • • •

THE above items are merely suggestive. The Government has collected an enormous amount of data on this general subject. The trouble is that no one seems to be doing anything about it.

It is election year and this particular job must be done in a hurry, and the most obvious and cogent thing is to start scattering checks as quickly as possible.

At the same time the individual farmer will have to submit to the winding of thousands of miles of Government red tape and have Federal employes and local conservation association men trampling his spring wheat or peering into his ravines to find symptoms of buckwheat or lespedeza. And that, as many solemn commentators have observed, will be that.

Navy Flier Killed In Plunge at Sea

San Diego, Calif., March 17 (AP).—A Navy flier was killed and his passenger escaped injury in a crash at sea 10 miles west of Point Loma, fleet air authorities reported today.

Going down with the plane when it burst into flames in a dive bombing attack, Lieut. (JG) Oliver E. White, attached to VF-2B Squadron, U. S. S. Saratoga, was killed.

A. W. Le Compte, radioman, second class, jumped with his parachute as the craft burst into flames. He landed safely in the ocean and was picked up by the destroyer Tarbell.

An amphibian plane and searching party from fleet air headquarters, North Island, was ordered out to search for White's body and the wreckage of the plane.

The flier lived in Coronado, Calif. He was unmarried.

When M-Day Comes.

M-DAY is a term fresh to the layman, but one he is going to hear increasingly. It stands, in the high command of the War Department, for mobilization day—that crucial date when the secret and highly perfected preparations for war change overnight to conspicuous action and the press of immediately new problems. For everyone from the General Staff to industrial control committees, M-Day is the red-letter day. You are not going to forget that term after reading "M-Day: the First Day of War" (Harcourt Brace, $2.50), by Rose M. Stein.

Here is a shrewd and masterly analysis, as literally thrilling as an Oppenhein plot, on the complex problems of undertaking a modern war. Not only is Miss Stein's documentation close and accurate; there was that to be expected from the assistant to the Senate Munitions Committee who prepared the official summary of the testimony.

But even better, for research is after all but a hand-maid, she has distinguished her book with the workings of a remarkably astute, poised and unbluffed mind. She shows us the sheer thinking process at its best, with a quality, in this general subject, which I can associate only with the late Frank Simonds.

One must, in a world which seems more and more confusing, be grateful for the clarity of "M-Day's" world picture. To view it is an exhilarating experience.

HOW did we come to our last M-Day?—the one which cost us 250,000 lives and $22,000,000,000. Miss Stein's version is put very clearly. Certainly, she says, we did not war because of the Lusitania case, or the Belgian atrocities, or our supposed affection for the Allies. These merely helped to warm the war sentiment.

The decision itself lay on other shoulders. "By a series of successive steps American business forced the country to enter the World War," she states. "And it is, shall I say, a little arresting to consider the simplicity of the moves.

On August 1, 1914, the partners of J. P. Morgan & Co., in their own quotation, were "heart and soul for the Allies"—a cool business choice based on the inferior industrial organization of the Central Powers and the sound financial position of the British Empire. The British blockade assisted this business choice, so that loans (though at first declared un-neutral by the State Department), munitions, and goods of all sorts were soon streaming toward the Allies. Then, having sent our industrial and financial activity sky-high, business could not risk a sudden stoppage from the belligerents' exhaustion, and the Government, though very reluctantly, had to take the step.

With names and quotations galore to scarify us, that must do as a sample of Miss Stein's narrative vein. You will want to follow for yourself the searchingness of her accounts of the mutinies in European armies and the stalemate of arms, which necessitated our unlooked-for dispatching of an A. E. F. In her picture of our preparation at home, of capital and labor in war-time, she is equally pungent and vivid. There is high explosives in these pages.

• • • •

BUT the jewel of the book is the final chapter—"Forces That Are Postponing War"—in which Miss Stein discusses the high chess game of international relations. We are saved from war because of the most curious paradox of conflicting interests among the powers. Japan, hating Russia in Asia and its threats of communism, still dare not strike because England would stand with Russia and America with England—and Japan could not win. Germany, hating Russian communism, hesitates to start a war which would range her against the 1914 alliance—that, let alone the military problem, would mean the Nazi suicide of internal dissension.

And this is the oddest of all, that Russia is a bulwark for world peace because she is not aggressive, and because any nation which allies itself against her faces the very real problem of maintaining labor morale. These main moves, and dozens of fascinating minor ones, constitute the game which the chancelleries of the world have to play.

Strange as it may seem, the international situation is favorable to a continuance of this balance. Every government knows that the nation which starts a major war will not, in the long run, be at all happy over its choice. Precarious this peace may be, yet it is still peace. And thus Miss Stein's book, apart from its very considerable excellencies, is that rara avis among works on the path of the world—it leaves us with a feeling of hopefulness. Armageddon, we will be glad to hear, is not yet upon us.

6 on 'Hill' Deny Knowing Smith Was Lobbyist

Senator Says He Thought Host at Party Was a Member of Congress.

Five Representatives and one Senator appeared before the Senate Lobby Committee yesterday and asserted that they had no idea that Robert E. Smith, legislative agent for power and railroad interests, was a lobbyist when they attended dinner parties at his apartment.

Some of the members of the House of Representatives said they did not even know the name of their host when they attended Smith's parties. The Senator, James E. Murray (Democrat), Montana, told the committee that he was "laboring under the impression that Smith was a member of Congress."

The Senator and Representatives were among 50 guests Smith named in testimony Monday as having attended his parties. None of the six members of the House, who Smith said, lived with him during part of last summer, appeared before the committee.

"Just Taken In."

Summing up for the committee, Senator Gibson (Republican), Vermont, told the members of Congress: "I think you fellows were just taken in."

Meanwhile, the Federal Communications Commission reported to the Senate that it had worked with the Lobby Committee in obtaining telegrams sejzed by the committee. It explained that it was attempting to obtain information regarding forgery or destruction of messages. The report was made in response to a Senate resolution introduced by Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho.

In the House, Representative Treadway (Republican), Massachusetts, demanded that members of the commission be removed from office and that seized telegrams be returned.

First to appear before the Lobby Committee was Representative Knute Hill (Democrat), Washington. He said he had attended two dinners at the Smith apartment.

"I didn't know he was a lobbyist," he said.

Hill said the first party was in honor of Marshall Dana, chairman of the Pacific-Northwest Planning Council.

"All that was discussed was reclamation projects in the West," Hill insisted.

The second party, Hill said, was held about 10 days ago for Gov. Ross of Idaho. He said John C. Page, of the Bureau of Reclamation, also was present.

"Practically all we met for and all we discussed was reclamation," Hill repeated. "There was no lobbying so far as I was concerned. Nobody approached me."

Voted for Holding Bill.

Hill said he had voted for the Wheeler-Rayburn holding company bill and that he would vote against the Pettingill rail rate bill and for the Black bill calling for registration of lobbyists. Representative Pettingill (Democrat), Indiana, is one of the Representatives named as having shared the Smith mansion.

Next in line was Representative Ford (Democrat), California.

"The funny part of it is," he said, "that I haven't been to these meetings."

Later he said he did go to the meeting last year, and that he hadn't attended a Smith party this session, although he had been invited.

"I wouldn't know Mr. Smith if I saw him," he asserted. "If he is a power lobbyist he didn't make any impression on me."

Ford said he had been invited by Representative Ekwell (Republican), Oregon, and added: "I supposed I was Mr. Ekwell's guest."

Representative Martin Smith (Democrat), Washington, told the committee that he attended the party last year. He said: "I didn't know until I read about it in the papers that the apartment was that of Robert Smith."

Smith said he didn't know his namesake was a power lobbyist and added that he would rather not say who invited him.

Representative Excused.

Both Ford and Smith protested they voted for the holding company bill and were for Black lobby bill.

Black persisted in asking each Congressman how he stood on the lobby bill until Senator Minton (Democrat), Indiana, laughingly accused him of lobbying.

Representative Smith was excused and to the witness chair came Representative Murdock (Democrat), Utah. He confessed to a longer, though slight acquaintance with Lobbyist Smith. He said he met him two or three years ago in Salt Lake City. He said he had been invited by a member of the House to a Smith party about a week ago. There, he said, both reclamation and the Pettingill bill were discussed.

"You of course didn't know Smith was a lobbyist," Senator Gibson remarked.

"No," said Murdock.

"As a matter of fact, he has been a lobbyist for years," said Gibson.

"Is that so?" said Murdock.

Representative White (Democrat), Idaho, said reclamation was discussed at the party he attended and that there was "some little bantering" about the Pettingill bill. He said Smith took only a small part in the discusion. White said he had been invited by some person who telephoned his secretary and he did not know who it was.

Senator Murray complained that he had been bothered a lot by lobbyists. He said he attended a Smith dinner with a group of Montanans, but had left before it was over. Four or five days later, he said, he attended another meeting.

"I didn't know Smith was a lobbyist," he added. "In fact, I was laboring under the impression he was a member of Congress. He seemed active and friendly, as a promoter should be.

Approached on Street.

"I have been approached by every lobbyist in Washington. The other day as I was coming out of a store I was caught on the street by a promoter who bewailed the policies of the Administration and, incidentally, brought up the Wheeler-Rayburn bill.

"Why, a woman lobbyist even got my private telephone number and proceeded to talk to me about this neutrality business."

The Communications Commission said in its report that it considered it a duty to investigate after the Black committee had revealed evidence of forgery and destruction of telegrams. It said that because the Black committee's inquiry and its own were parallel, the two inquiries were co-ordinated.

The commission showed that it had investigated messages in the offices of Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies, and in that of the Radio Corporation of America. It said that at no time did it have more than two employes examining messages.

100 Die, 300 Missing In Boat Blaze in China

Hongkong, March 17 (AP).—At least a hundred persons were believed to have perished today when four crowded Chinese passenger boats, being towed upstream from Kongmoon on a small river emptying into the South China Sea, caught fire near Shiuhing.

Of the 500 passengers, largely women pilgrims en route to a temple, 300 were missing after the disaster.

Union Group Accused.

Laredo, Tex., March 17 (AP).—District Judge J. F. Mullally today told the Webb County grand jury to investigate alleged recent activities here tending to create disrespect for the American Government and disloyalty to the flag. Judge Mullally told the grand jury calumnious remarks had allegedly been made at a meeting of Laredo laborers planning to form a union.

Court Grants Plea For Strewl Retrial

Albany, N. Y., March 17 (AP).—The appellate division ordered a new trial for Manny Strewl, now serving a 50-year prison term for the kidnaping of Lieut. John J. O'Connell, jr., here in 1933.

The court voted 3 to 2 for reversal of Strewl's conviction.

"In the light of the record before us, the errors in rulings were serious, material and prejudicial," Justice Leon C. Rhodes wrote in the majority opinion.

Strewl was convicted as the go-between in the ransom negotiations.

Young O'Connell is the 26-year-old nephew of Albany County's powerful Democratic leaders, Ed and Dan O'Connell. On a July night he was snatched from his home in Albany, put in an automobile and taken away.

Warsaw, March 17 (Jewish Telegraphic Agency).—Polish Jews carried out a nationwide strike today in protest against what they called the Government's failure to check current anti-Semitic demonstrations. The strike was called by Jewish labor unions but was participated in by all classes of the Jewish population. The demonstrations were generally orderly.

New Plea Planned In Kennamer Case

Oklahoma City, Okla., March 17 (AP).—Federal Judge Franklin E. Kennamer organized a new trial fight tonight for his 20-year-old son, Phil, under a 25-year prison sentence for the society slaying of John Gorrell, Jr., at Tulsa.

"We will ask a new trial on the basis of startling new evidence," said the judge.

The announcement brought an immediate reaction from Holly Anderson, Tulsa County prosecutor, who said he would "oppose vigorously any attempt to reopen the case."

Phil Kennamer testified in his trial that he killed Gorrell, a Kansas City dental student, to protect Virginia Wilcox, daughter of H. F. Wilcox, Tulsa oil man, from a purported extortion plot. The killing occurred on Thanksgiving night, 1934. His conviction was upheld last week.

Morgenthau on Vacation.

Church Burned Coughlin Spurs Drive for New

Wind Blows Flames Away From $750,000 Shrine Being Built Nearby.

By the Associated Press.

Royal Oak, Mich., March 17.—Fire that destroyed the modest frame church where Father Charles E. Coughlin began his radio broadcasts 10 years ago, spurred efforts today toward completion of the new $750,000 Shrine of the Little Flower.

Wind carried the flames away from the new shrine, only 75 feet distant, and its stately crucifixion tower as the shingle-covered little church, visited by thousands of tourists, burned.

The blaze, attributed by firemen to faulty wiring, was discovered only 10 minutes before the first mass of St. Patrick's Day was to have been celebrated, at 6:30 a. m. The adjacent convent of the Little Flower was saved, with difficulty.

Tower Completed.

Father Coughlin said the interior of the new auditorium might be completed within two months. The crucifixion tower, a showplace of Detroit's north Woodward avenue suburban section, and the Narthex, are complete, as is the exterior of the auditorium. Services will be transferred next Sunday to the Narthex.

Father Coughlin said most of the fire loss, estimated at $30,000 was covered by insurance.

The church, the first in America to be dedicated to Ste. Therese of Lixieux, "The Little Flower of Jesus," was built in 1926 by the parish, in which there were only 32 families.

Began Broadcasts in 1926.

Three months after it was dedicated, Father Coughlin began broadcasting in the hope a radio audience might help lift the parish debt. His audience grew swiftly, until by 1930 a broadcasting system estimated it numbered 40,000,000 persons weekly.

Letters, many of them containing contributions, poured in, reaching 400,000 a week at times during the depression when Father Coughlin began devoting much of his radio time to political and economic questions.

The broadcasts were delivered from the church until 1931, when the crucifixion tower was dedicated. Since then his discourses have been delivered in a studio there.

Work on the shrine, financed by Father Coughlin's radio audience, was begun in 1933.

Maryland Club Dancer Opens 3d Week Here

Lucille Wray Prepares Own Orchestrations to Accompany Act

The time came for Lucille Wray to leave Maryland Club Gardens—but the management couldn't bring itself around to letting her leave. So Lucille is there for her third week, doing very well, thank you. She just doesn't seem to run out of those ultra-sophisticated modern dance things—never repeating a routine, nor costume.

Incidentally, as noted herewith once before, Lucille is the only hoofer on record (so far as the records of the Gardens go) who makes her own orchestrations, unassisted and without the aid of mirrors, or whatnot.

They do say that a large part of the charm of this suburban gatherin' spot lies in the fact it is the only place in these precincts where the tootsies can be rested on a brass rail—where you drink like a man, vertically, not propped on your elbow at a table (unless you wish).

This one comes from the Dude Ranch. It seems that dancers very frequently bathe their pedal extremists in a solution of epsom salts just before undertaking the business of amusing the customers. So, the other night one of the Ranch's femme fandangoists prepared the foot bath, and then rushed off to catch a cue, leaving it untouched on the floor. When she returned she met the Ranch's pet kitten leaving the room—licking his chops. Oh, well, it probably will teach Milt Barrett to set out a saucer of water for the beastie from now on. Ursula Martin, the bubble dance maiden, and Jean Savage, tap and toe expert, are amusing the patrons at the Ranch this week.

Very Uxtry special! Rushed from the Shoreham. The circus is coming!—and it won't be on Mrs. McGillicuddy's lot, either. It'll be at the Shoreham, smack bang in the middle of the ballroom, for one week, beginning next Monday. Hamid's Circus is the name, with elephants, dogs, clowns, tumblers, bears and all the trimmings. The same circus that fetaured the Waldorf Astoira's New Year's ball. Seems that the circus vogue all started with "Jumbo." Any way, it's a grand steal on the open lot variety, and you ought to be there next week with bells on.

Bert Nagle and company, featuring Miss Hilja, are wowing them at the Lotus this week, according to early goers. The presentation is built around "Felix the Cat, in Person." And they do say that the imitation of feline motions and actions are only short of amazing. The "Dancing Debbies" have been held over this week, with Theodore and White, ballroom dancers.

Talent at the La Paree's amateur night last Monday was so good in the opinion of the judges that it finally was decided to make it a tie, which was quite satisfactory to Johnny McKnight and Vic Arnold, the winning singers. . . . Doing a Club Volga Boatman floor is something in the nature of a concert, so far as the orchestra is concerned, what with Consuelo Gonzales and Vladimir Diloff singing all sorts of continental things requiring deft and skilful interpretation. Of course, you may know already that Maestro Michel Michaeloff knows a thing or two about symphonies himself—and does a swell job accordingly.

In two nights at the Heigh-Ho, Mlle. Illiana, the Russian singing star, has convinced Ol' Massa Pete Macias and his patrons that her much-heralded advance notices were not overdone. You may remember Illiana as the gypsy singer in the flicker, "Naughty Marietta." She's ben reaping plaudits from coast to coast. More about her later in the week. In the meantime, since I understand she can be here only two weeks, go thou and see for thyselves.

Senor Al Valencia, Spanish musician, provided one of those delightful impromptu moments the other day at the Ambassador's Hi-Hat, playing most entertaingly on his squeeze-box. Senor Valencia has played for several royal families of Europe—as well as Manager Frank McNey . . . Ahhh, gals, there's a handsome new barytone at the Russian Troika. He's Michel Michon, and until you've heard and seen Michel sing "None But the Lonely Heart," your lives have been for naught. Michel did his first barytone at the Moscow Art Theater—and since has been singing Russian grand opera in Europe. He's the backbone of the new Troika choral group.

Culbertson on Bridge

I Turn Comforter.

In my role of bridge commentator, to my sorrow, I find more to criticize than to praise. It is a distinct pleasure, therefore, when, instead of castigating some player for his stupidity, I am able conscientiously to comfort him by pointing out that his error really was not the fatal feature of the hand.

Mr. H. L. Slack, of Whitewater, Wis., writes me in a spirit of deep humility, confessing that he "pulled an awful boner" in the defense of a doubled game contract. Well, I can't stultify myself by saying his play was correct but, perhaps, he will be comforted by my pointing out that it probably had no bearing on the final result.

The bidding, as reported by Mr. Slack, was:

East	South	West	North
1 Di.	1 Sp.	1 N. T.	2 Ht.
3 Di.	Pass	4 Di.	4 Ht.
5 Di.	Pass	Pass	5 Ht.
Pass	Pass	Double (final bid)

Obviously North was a superconservative. His two heart bid, opposite his partner's spade overcall, was at least a two trick underbid, and, had East passed, as he should have, might well have resulted in a lost game. His proper bid on a hand this strong was a diamond cue-bid, or at least a jump to four hearts. Now to quote from Mr. Slack's letter:

"East, fearing North was blank in diamonds, led the spade 7, North ducked, and I, without counting or, maybe, without thinking, put in my spade jack, North winning with the ace, then leading trumps. East won and led a club, and all was over.

"Had I ducked, as I should have on the opening lead, inferring that North had only two spades, since one obviously was the ace, and North had not shown spade support, the contract would have been set. It also is true that if North has three spades the contract is made regardless of what I play.

"It really looks bad for me, so do not razz me too much if you use the hand."

Undoubtedly the play of the spade jack was bad. But, after the opening lead, it is doubtful that the contract would have been defeated. North should, of course, win the first trick with the spade ace (West having ducked) and knock out the ace of trumps. Now the fate of the contract rests on East's next play. Unless he continues spades, removing declarer's only entry to the dummy, five hearts cannot be defeated. And the second spade lead is questionable from East's point of view. Declarer might easily have had the singleton ace, and in that case East's spade laed would be suicidal.

Any other return by East would result in an easy squeeze and throwin play. North would ruff a diamond lead, or win a club lead with the ace. He then would lead out every trump, reducing all hands to four cards. His own would be the 9-6-4 of clubs and a spade. East's cards, since he held nothing in clubs or spades, would not matter. Dummy would keep four spades. And poor West would have to blank a club honor in order to hold the guard to the spade suit. Since he would be forced to discard a club honor the situation would be easy to read. North would have only to throw West on lead with a club to compel a spade lead up to dummy's tenace for the last three tricks. Thus only a trump and a club would be lost.

However, it must be admitted that the declarer had an even easier time of it as the play went.

Townsend Plan Hearings To Be Opened March 26

By the Associated Press.

Open hearings will start March 26 before the special Congressional Committee investigating the Townsend and other old age pension programs.

Chairman Bell (Democrat), Mo., announced the date after a closed meeting of the committee yesterday at which details of procedure were approved.

It was understood that Dr. F. E. Townsend, president of the organization which bears his name and co-founder of the plan for a transaction tax to raise funds for payment of $200 monthly pensions to all persons more than 60 years old, will be among the first witnesses questioned by the committee. R. E. Clements, national secretary of the Townsend organization and co-founder, also will be among the first to appear.

Hunger March By 5,000 Called

A new national hunger march under a new name—National Protest March—will converge on Washington April 11 as a militant protest against curtailments in Federal relief, according to Herbert Benjamin, secretary of the National Unemployment Council, who led similar marches to Washington in 1931 and 1932. He made the announcement yesterday from the office of Representative Marcantonio (Republican), New York, in the House Office Building.

While not mentioning the plight of 3,000 District unemployed who are to be stricken from relief rolls because of the national policy, Benjamin sharply criticized the Roosevelt Administration for "systematically and ruthlessly liquidating all Federal relief activities."

Benjamin predicted he would have 5,000 marchers to parade in front of the Capitol and the White House on April 11, and if beneficial results are not forthcoming a larger demonstration will follow in June.

Miners Rescue Pony Trapped for 19 Days

Crooksville, Ohio, March 17 (AP).—Guy Brown and his three husky sons rescued Fannie, their pet pony, today from the family mine in Louis Hollow.

Fannie, trapped 19 days ago in a cave-in, emerged sleepily but apparently none the worse for her experience after the four men had spent the night digging a tunnel through 20 feet of coal.

Chamber of Commerce Ousts Critic of WPA

Beaumont, Tex., March 17 (AP).—Don Parker, asserted to have criticized a WPA project as "worthless and useless," was ousted last night from his job as manager of the Liberty, Tex., Chamber of Commerce after he refused to resign.

J. Frank Davis, historical supervisor for the WPA at San Antonio, wrote Parker asking that he recommend someone to collect historical data on Liberty County to be published in the American Guide, a WPA project.

Parker's reply, written on stationery of the Liberty Chamber of Commerce, was said to have contained the remarks derogatory to the WPA. Parker apologized for using chamber of commerce stationery.

Mrs. Roosevelt at Exhibit, Fair, Dinner All in a Day

Wedding Anniversary Is Celebrated, Too; First Lady Will Leave Tomorrow on "Off-the-Record" Vacation Until March 25.

A luncheon, the opening of an exhibit, a fair, a tea and her own wedding anniversary dinner made yesterday a busy one for Mrs. Roosevelt. This afternoon she will entertain at a musicale and tomorrow will leave town for a short vacation "off the record" until her return to Washington March 25.

Mrs. Roosevelt was guest of honor yesterday at a luncheon given at the Capitol by the Senate Ladies. From the luncheon she went to the Pythian Temple, at 1012 Ninth street, to open the exhibit of a model of the Holy Land, sponsored by The Washington Post for the benefit of the Children's Hospital.

Wide-eyed children from the hospital clinic watched the First Lady with as much interest as they displayed in the exhibit. Also present were the Bishop of Washington, the Rev. James Freeman and the Rev. Edward Arbetz, who represented the Catholic University; Rabbi Abram Simon, Mrs. Herbert Howard, treasurer of the Ladies' Board of the Children's Hospital, and Dr. John Talbot, secretary of the board of directors.

Later in the afternoon, Mrs. Roosevelt was guest of honor at the newspaperwomen's Irish County Fair, another benefit for the Children's Hospital, given at the National Press Club auditorium, and at a tea given for her by a group of Democratic women at the Woman's National Democratic Club.

A small group of old friends comprised the guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt last night at a dinner in celebration of their wedding anniversary. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Caspar Miller and the Undersecretary of State, Mr. William Phillips. The latter was one of President Roosevelt's ushers.

Among those present at the tea given by the Democratic women were, Mrs. George H. Dern, Mrs. Royal S. Copeland, Mrs. August Lonnergan, Mrs. Burton K. Wheeler, Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, Mrs. Carl A. Record Crowd Attends Fair Of Newspaper Women's Club

St. Patrick's Day Motif Adds to Gayety at Annual Benefit for Children's Hospital; Mrs. Roosevelt Draws Prize for Self and President From "Cake."

By Dudley Harmon.

Toy balloons and bewildered cameramen were trampled on in the shuffle as a record crowd, many in it wearing green carnations and rubber snakes in honor of St. Patrick's Day, gathered for the annual fair of the Newspaper Women's Club. The event, proceeds of which go to the Children's Hospital, was conducted afternoon and evening in the auditorium of the National Press Club.

Mrs. Roosevelt arrived shortly after the beginning of the radio broadcast which opened the program. Mrs. Claude Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, and Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry, wife of the Senator from Rhode Island, associate member of the club, already had spoken on the work of the Children's Hospital. They were introduced by Miss Hazel Edgar, club member substituting for Miss Margaret Hart, president of the club, who was busy somewhere behind the scenes.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who wore a black tailored suit with white revers and a black hat trimmed with white ribbon, also talked briefly on the work of the institution. She was followed at the microphone by Mrs. James F. Curtis, of the lady visitors board of the hospital, and Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts. All three are associate members of the Newspaperwomen's Club. Mrs. Rogers, in order to be present at the fair, missed her first roll call in Congress since she has been a member.

Wedding Staged.

A "Tom Thumb" wedding, followed by a tap dance, was staged by young pupils of a Capital dancing class. It drew cheers from the audience and smiles from Mrs. Roosevelt, in honor of whose thirty-first wedding anniversary it was presented.

Out of the huge bridal cake used in the Tom Thumb wedding, which was in reality a grab-bag full of presents, Mrs. Roosevelt drew a silver compact, a gift from members of the club. Tucked inside the cake also was a silver paper knife for the President. Later the other gifts were sold to guests at 10 cents apiece.

After the wedding, deep-voiced "Radio Joe Kauffmann," Washington merchant, introduced Jack Benny and June Knight, stage and radio stars in town this week. What they said will never be known, as the din was too great for them to be heard. However, everybody laughed merrily.

The bride's role was played by little Mary Ellen MacDonald. Young Richard Shenk was the bridegroom and Robert Stibers played the part of the late Theodore Roosevelt, who gave Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt away when she was married.

Mrs. Daniel Roper, wife of the Secretary of Commerce, presided over the cake booth. Mrs. Gerry hawked balloons. Mrs. George H. Dern, wife of the Secretary of War, and Mrs. Henry Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, wandered enthusiastically from booth to booth.

Mrs. Alice Longworth, with a rubber snake hung round her neck, sat at a table with Mrs. Joseph Himes, of Frederick, Md., wife of former Representative Himes. At a nearby booth guests were bidding eagerly for a doll donated and autographed by young Paulina Longworth.

Art Saleswoman.

At another booth Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, an artist herself, persuaded friends to have their portraits done by an artist who "will do more for you than nature did." Mme. Rajamaitri, wife of the Minister of Siam, exhibited a sketch of herself just completed by the artist.

Mrs. Robert Imbrie was in charge of the fortune telling booth, assisted by a group of tea readers and star gazers.

"I can't wait to have my palm read," said Miss Sibella Skidelsky, who is a Russian and "believes in fortune telling."

Mrs. Ralph McDowell sat at a table with her daughter, Mary, who recently returned after a trip to New York. Nearby, Representative Virginia Jenckes chatted with her daughter, Virginia.

Mrs. Edward Meigs, president of the Women's National Democratic Club, was present, as were three of her fellow club members, Mrs. George Eccles, Mrs. Samuel Herrick and Mrs. William Jennings Price.

The Children's Hospital was represented by Mrs. Mattie Gibson, the superintendent; Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt and Miss Olivia Stokes.

Mme. Saito, wife of the Ambassador of Japan; Mrs. William Doak, widow of the former Secretary of Labor, and the Misses Mary and Anne Randolph were among the distinguished guests present.

Among others present were Mrs. Mark Bristol, wife of Admiral Bristol; Mrs. Charles M. Lea, Mrs. Hubert Utterback, Mrs. Wayne-Chatfield-Taylor and Mrs. Robert Jackson.

The work of the Children's Hospital and the need for its support were described in a radio broadcast at 7:30 p. m. by newspaperwomen representing various publications and publicity agencies. Those who spoke included Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, Mrs. Sallie Pickett, Miss Elizabeth Poe, Miss Roberta Bradshaw, Miss Margaret Hart and Mrs. Mary MacCracken Jones.

Washington Scene

By the Poe Sisters.

Another social tale of two cities will be written tomorrow night when a group of Washington belles attend the famed Esquire ball in Baltimore. The Washington committee of the ball includes in its membership Miss Nancy Wright, Miss Slovene Clagett and Miss Villette Sullivan.

Pretty Miss Catherine McKane, daughter of Mrs. James McKane, of Milwaukee, who joined the debutante colony here this fall, will attend the ball also. The Baltimore committee of matrons for the ball contains names familiar to Washingtonians including those of Mrs. Donald Hooker, Mrs. Frank Wright, Mrs. William Swope, Mrs. James Turner, jr., Mrs. Winchester White and Mrs. Leslie Peard, jr.

Miss Anne Preston McAdoo, Miss Kitty Knapp and Miss Bette Fulton, often seen at Washington dances, are on the junior committee of the ball. The Esquire committee likewise has members whose names are frequently on Washington dinner and dance lists including Edgar Spilman, Edward Richardson, Hamilton Gale, John Boyce, Courtney Jenifer and Norval King, jr.

Speaking of Baltimore, invitations have been sent out by Mrs. Alexander Gordon, sister-in-law of Mrs. George Barnett, widow of the World War commandant of the Marine Corps, for a luncheon to be given by Mrs. Gordon on March 29, in honor of Mrs. Richard Evelyn Byrd, wife of the intrepid polar explorer. Mrs. Gordon is chairman, by the way, of the bridge tournaments being held on Thursdays at the Mount Vernon Club, which attract a gallery of Washington fans nearly every week.

By the way, Washington can boast of one of the most distinguished "bridge foursomes" in the country, composed of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the war President; Mrs. Jesse Jones, wife of the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Mrs. Bernard B. Jones and Mrs. J. Harry Covington. This quartet of players meets frequently. Between games they study and discuss the intricacies of various bridge systems. The games usually take place in the Washington homes of the foursome. In pleasant weather, it is planned that some of the bridge sessions will take place at Audley Farms, the home of Mrs. Bernard B. Jones in nearby Virginia.

Real regret is expressed in Washington at the impending departure March 23 of Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Barklie, of Philadelphia, who have been passing the winter in the apartment in the Mayflower Hotel formerly occupied by the late Vice President Charles Curtis and his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Edward E. Gann.

Mrs. Barklie belongs to the little coterie of Philadelphia folk who enjoy a few months of Washington life each winter. Her handsome estate in Wayne, Pa., is across the road from that of Mrs. Charles M. Lea, also prominent in the Philadelphia colony of Washington.

FOR LOVELY WOMEN!

TWO ON SAFARI

By GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN

Ballard Mallory, American explorer in search of young Hon. Laurence Morland, lost in the African jungle, is accompanied by an enigmatic English girl, Josephine Cascoden. In Lourenco Marques, she receives a cable which distresses her, and in the shop of Ibn-ben-Dur, she momentarily loses her calm when the name Morland is mentioned. In camp, Mallory hears important news from the jungle. Josephine secretly follows him into the jungle.

Chapter XXV.

"What Is Morland to You?"

HE ARRIVED close to Shilling and the two talked with signs alone but so graphically she could understand all they conveyed. Careful not to make a sound she slipped to the ground, took Swayback's reins and transferred them to Shilling. With an imperious nod she ordered Bongo to go on. Still in the grip of the belief she must be acting on orders he took up Ballard's spoor, but with a difference. Heretofore his progress had seemed quiet enough, but now it was absolutely soundless. When she cracked a twig he paused to look back in horror and after that raised his heels more slowly as if waiting for her to plant her foot exactly where he had trod. She was elated at her own understanding; at this rate she and Bongo would soon be able to converse.

She made a crucial discovery—that a foot placed toe first makes less noise than when the heel is first to touch the ground. They threaded their way through the thicket on whose outer edge Shilling had been stationed, crossed a wide swale and plunged again into semi-darkness.

Just as the glint of sunshine began to show again before them, Bongo suddenly stood as if transfixed and she found herself full-length against his body, her arms thrown around him. He released himself gently and pointed as a native always points, with his whole extended arm and drooping fingers. She sighted along the arm and gradually made out three blots of darker shadow within the general gloom. Brushing past the boy, she moved toward them a step at a time, studying each spot before she trod.

Minutes seemed to turn into hours, but presently she was so close to Ballard and his two companions that it seemed they must hear her breathe. What saved her was the intensity with which their attention was fixed elsewere. Taking advantage of a patch of sand, fine as flour, she sank to her hands and knees and crawled forward until she knelt close to Ballard's back. Tugo saw her as did the waterboy, but only out of slanted eyes that immediately resumed direction. Slowly she lowered her head to peer beneath the fronds of the low clump of milala palms which edged the thicket. She drew a long, silent breath, yet it seemed to whistle in her ears, but mercifully nobody heard.

Out on the plain was a great black pool amid the sunlight. It stirred, moved, betrayed itself by a flicker here and a whisk there. She had seen pictures of bison. The animals before her, thick at the shoulder and with spindling haunches, looked like buffalo to her inexperience, but they were wildebeest, feeding down wind straight toward the ambushed guns.

A Tense Moment.

Never had she beheld animals so grotesque. As if in answer to her thought, and for no apparent reason, a bull broke away from the herd.

Ballard, grown impatient, steadied his rifle and fired. The bull's heels flew up in an amazing gyration; for an instant he stood on his head like a column, then crashed flat on his back. The frightened herd milled, broke into groups, but finally went streaming past at long range. Ballard fired again and again, felling two more animals. A third, badly wounded, broke back and started alone across the plain. Josephine seized the spare gun in Tugo's hands and tugged. Knowing better than to struggle over a loaded weapon, he let it go.

It was a double-barreled four-fifty, used only in an emergency or for elephant or rhino, and she had to brace its 11 pounds of weight on her left knee. Her first shot went high, but with the second she dropped the fleeing beast in its tracks. Ballard looked around in anger, ready to smash Tugo over the head for breaking the gun-bearer's code, but his set jaw fell open as his eyes discovered Josephine.

"You!" he gasped, still incredulous.

"What of it?" she said, nursing her right shoulder with a trembling hand. "Since there's dirty work to be done, why should you have to do it all?"

"Great stuff!" he murmured, still at a loss. "You saved us a long chase after wounded game."

With astonishing swiftness the wilderness became populated. Half a dozen men appeared, accompanied by several youths, gatherers of surra wine who welcomed the chance to trade the labor of carrying the carcasses into camp for a little meat. The syces with their charges were already at hand and Josephine, badly shaken, was glad to climb on Swayback.

Leaving the waterboy in charge, Ballard mounted and with Tugo as guide struck straight across country. So open was the going that the horses trotted side by side, but Ballard had fallen into a taciturn mood.

Only later, when they were sitting close together in their hammock chairs watching the swift passing of the twilight, did he condescend to talk and that because he saw her touching her right shoulder with exploratory fingers.

"That gun has a kick like a mule. Got you, did it?"

"Rather!"

"Let me see."

She pushed her pajama jacket down from her shoulder, exposing a huge blue-black bruise. He leaned toward her quickly, all solicitude touched the spot tenderly and then with a firmness that made her whole body wince.

"Easy, now," he murmured, "I've got to find out. Under the collar bone and in from the shoulder. You're lucky; nothing broken, and the joint isn't out."

"Thanks," said Josephine, "but that doesn't keep it from hurting."

Drastic Measures.

In the gathering gloom the bruise showed black as a coal pit within the surrounding moon-white flesh. He stared at it, fascinated, and the longer he stared the more he was entranced. Tenderness welled in him—the tenderness of strength toward all frailty or distress—and fooled him into thinking he would have felt the same toward any other hurt child. For a moment he forgot Miss Cascoden, Josephine, Jo; then, with a suddenness which later was to seem diabolical, he remembered them all.

"Of course, it hurts," he heard himself saying. "There's no cure, and only one thing that might help. Shall I try it?"

"Anything."

He leaned forward, laid his cheek on the bruise and pressed it there, his right arm across her lap, his hand gripping her bare elbow. For a moment she waited, expecting him to speak, but he said nothing, kept so still it seemed he had stopped breathing. To all intents the cure worked. She forgot all about the hurt, distracted by the tourmoil in her veins. A few weeks ago so bold a gesture would have earned a sound slap and thereafter been ignored. But what was happening now had no possible connection with what she had been.

It troubled Jo profoundly, she could feel no anger, only a great curiosity as to her own undiscovered self. Her blood grew warm and riotous, sounding the warning that if she wished to leap for the safe shore it was now or never.

"What are you doing?" she asked furious at the catch in her breath.

"Listening to your heart—asking it a question."

"My heart can't answer; ask me."

"Who is Laurence Morland and what is he to you?"

There was a long pause, almost a hiatus in the march of the stars, before she answered: "The one person on earth I love above all others."

His cheek, a moment ago so warm, turned icy against her breast and promptly she, too, seemed to grow cold. He drew erect, and then sank back in his chair; seized by a strange inertia—yet not strange, for during the last 24 hours he had been tossed up and down the emotional scale. He felt all washed out and sorry for himself. He wished he had never set foot in Red Lion Square or heard of Laurence Morland.

Chief Goes Berserk.

Only last night Matogada had brought undeniable confirmation—the white marauder, not satisfied with going native, had gone completely berserk. The old chief, though now a conquered subject, came from a long and proud line; his kingship might be a joke to the casual outsider, but to himself and his people it was as fixed and presumably as ancient as the solar system. Outwardly he bowed to the inevitable, but the thin blood in his hardening veins boiled whenever he thought of the huge sum of tribute paid annually by his tribe under the guise of hut tax.

His tale told, Ballard had arisen from the midnight conclave dedicated to solemn resolve: Whenever and wherever he came up with Morland he would deal with him unhesitatingly as he deserved. But in the meantime another matter, no less important, had demanded solution—Josephine. Last night, confronted with the problem of Josephine, he had stumbled against what appeared sheer inspiration. Ever since boyhood he had been forced ot flee from easy conquest, but here was a chance to reverse hs habitual direction and save himself a lot of trouble. For her best interest, if for no more selfish reason, he would make her fall in love with him, a genuine head-over-heels affair! The scheme had seemed so simple and brilliant it had made him laugh, but now, lying back in the long chair, looking up at the stars, he wondered if he would ever laugh again.

The plan had started out well enough when he had awakened her in the morning to give her veiled warning as to his intentions. He had been schooling himself for the jumps ahead, calculating how far he could go with such an opponent and not come a cropper. The moment of the baring of her shoulder had answered that question for all time. With the laying of his cheek against the black bruise he had come to earth with a crash, whipped almost before he had started.

He would have been astonished could he have looked by some miraculous alchemy of sight inside her head and watched the workings of her mind. To her, at this moment, he was nearer than ever before, nearer than when his head had rested on her shoulder, for the scales had fallen from her eyes and a locked book had fallen open. She could read him from cover to cover, see him more clearly than in the light of open day. This man, nameless otherwise in her innermost thoughts, loved her. Was she glad or sorry? She was glad.

"I'm getting cold," she said without looking down at him. "Good night."

Store Offers A Permanent In a Minute

And Besides the Speed It's Astonishingly Effective.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

SUPPOSE Cinderella's beauteous golden tresses had been straight as a poker. Maybe that doting fairy godmother of her's would have hocus pocussed up some curls. But on the other hand, maybe curls weren't her specialty and she either couldn't or wouldn't. What then? Poor Cinderella, who never had heard of a permanent wave, would have had to be content with straight hair.

That's where we're one up on Cinderella. Our godmother is science, and she is making spoiled brats of us all. First, she gave us the permanent wave, and now she goes herself one better and perfects such a permanent as you never have seen. It takes one minute to give. One minute!

And it works without electricity or chemicals.

First of all your hair is put up in a wrapper. Then some little tube-like things are slipped over the wrapped strands, left on for 60 seconds—and removed. Meantime, you've been free to roam around, chat over the phone, and do about as you please while the actual wave was under way.

When the wrappers are removed you find it hard to believe your eyes. Such a wave, you say, could hardly have resulted from mechanics. It must have been given by nature in a moment of unparalleled generosity.

If you want one of these permanents—it's the eighth wonder of the world—do call us and we'll tell you who gives them, how much, and where.

New Type Salt Shaker.

WELL, it's happened at last! Some ingenious young fellow has invented a salt shaker that won't clog. Think what a boom that is. If there is anything that's downright provoking, and ample incentive to rave and rant, it's one of those pesky shakers that refuse to yield the salt, which is soggy by that time anyway.

The secret of this shaker—which the inventor calls "server"—is this: The top is made of diatomite, a material that absorbs up to 125 per cent of its weight in water. The moisture is removed from the air by the diatomite top before it reaches the salt. You can always depend on the server to keep the salt dry and free flowing.

Advocate of Early Nursery Training

Working mothers and those with limited incomes must turn increasingly to the nursery school to give their children training which will result in good habits and well adjusted lives, believes Mrs. Whittlesey.

More State-supported nursery schools would mean fewer jails, penitentiaries and asylums for taxpayers to maintain, says Mrs. Louise Bruere Whittlesey, worker in the National Institute of Public Affairs of Washington.

Fight on Crime Begins in Nurseries, Says Expert, Who Urges Guidance Centers for 'Middle Classes'

Jails Are Supported by Taxes, Why Not Places for the Young.

By Warwick Rust.

WHAT TO DO about crime is one of the biggest questions of today. Schools, courts, parents, women's clubs and other organizations are seeking some solution to this problem. It is the belief of many educators that both good and bad habits are formed in the period of a child's existence under the age of eighteen months.

Mrs. Louise Bruere Whittlesey, who is of that mind, believes that the fight against crime should begin in the nursery school.

Mrs. Whittlesey is the wife of Walter Lincoln Whittlesey, professor of politics at Princeton University, and is an active worker in the National Institute of Public Affairs in Washington. She is interested in nursery schools as a hobby.

"Many young 'would-be' mothers of today," she says, "are not mothers because of their limited incomes and because they must hold down jobs. Girls who have been trained for professions in college, busy mothers, who are holding down jobs, are not capable of giving intelligent and wise attention to their children. There is no means to provide for these children properly. It, therefore, becomes the responsibility of the nursery schools to assume the care of these 'motherless' children. They alone get hold of them at an early enough age. They alone can work out the problems which these mothers have neither the time nor training to consider."

Should a child of 18 months be spanked? Mrs. Whittlesey's answer is "no." She says that punishment results in rivalry, a lack of frankness between the generations, and that it makes them critical of one another.

The child, she believes, should be taught obedience through faith not fear. "Fear," she says, "will form a barrier to perfect confidence and there must be perfect confidence between the child and the trainer if the trainer is to discover what is in the back of the child's mind. This confidence will eliminate dishonesty, sneaking and unfairness because of the right kind of contacts with the right kind of older people."

Up to the age of 18 months, Mrs. Whittlesey points out, the child is busy discovering himself and the world about him. He must, by this time, have had the foundation laid for courage, self-control and self-relience. Good hibits of living, regular meals, baths, fresh air and sleep are parts of a routine and he begins to take his place in the world of people, parents and playmates. The interests of these infants should never be subservient to the grown-ups' convenience. "For this reason," Mrs. Whittlesey says, "I firmly believe that the child would be better cared for by nursery school than by mothers trained for entirely different work.

How is the public to obtain these complete nursery schools with well-trained nurses?

By shifting emphasis from the cure-all to the preventive, says Mrs. Whittlesey.

"Every year," she explains, "we pay taxes for certain 'public conveniences,' such as jails, homes for the feeble-minded and insane asylums. We pay without complaint and without thought. We pay because our minds have been trained to accept such institutions. If we are to realize the passing of these burdens we must accept the coming of their preventatives. Today the nursery school belongs to the wealthy and the poorer classes, but the middle classes, the most vital class of all, lacks its benefits. It will only be when nursery schools become a community affair for which ctizens are taxed that they will become universal."

Women Will Welcome Their Charm, Color, Subtle Flattery.

CAPES AND SCARFS, ever effective devices for creating an air of fragile femininity, will be much in evidence in evening attire this spring and summer. Every woman will rejoice in their return, because they not only give supplementary charm and color to gowns, but are subtle flatterers of their wearers.

Evening dresses without sleeves often have long scarfs of the same fabric, draped off the shoulders. Some are caught at the wrist, with a jeweled band like a bracelet, others fall to the feet, and are turned up again, to fasten under the belt. Red scarfs on white dresses, and mauve on turquoise, are some effective color contrasts.

The net cape over the vivid print evening gown is one of the most delightful additions to this season's style picture. This is illustrated in the striking evening gown, in the accompanying picture. The full-length cape, of black silk "point d'esprit," is worn over a silk carnation print of bright colors, on a black background. Cut out florals form the straps of the square decolleletage.

The costume is available in a Washington store. For further details call Frances Mangum, Post Fashion Editor, National 4200, Ext. 323.

Bright Hues Presented In New Paris Belts

Paris (AP).—Dress designers have evidently discovered that the crucial point in many a costume is the belt. It is the point selected for a bright spot of color or for a shiny note of trimming. Belts this season were wide, many of them in brilliant colored suede, and nearly all handsomely clasped or buckled.

MARY HAWORTH Says:

No Sensible Woman Should Think of Marrying a Man for His Kindness to Her So Long As She Finds Herself Overcome With Embarrassment at His Mannerisms.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been keeping company with a young man since last September. I have known him for 2½ years. In fact, we work in the same office. Very often he takes me out to dinner and shows. Since Christmas he has gotten very serious and about a month ago he told me he loved me. Everyone in the office knows he cares for me; or, to use their expression, that "he is crazy about me." But I don't love him. He is a wonderful fellow, treats me like a queen and would make a marvelous husband. He likes a home and children and is very sensible in money matters and other responsibilities that help to make a happy marriage. We both enjoy the same amusements and like to do the same things. I am 24 and he is 28—but, Miss Haworth, he looks like a fellow of 22.

Mary Haworth.

• • • •

When I first introduce him to my friends they think he is younger than I, and when I tell them different, they can't believe it. The greatest fault I have to find with him is that he acts a little feminine, although he really isn't. When I introduce him to people that is what they think, although they soon find out it isn't so. Also, when we are in company it is very embarrasing because sometimes he gets a peculiar expression on his face and people stare and it makes me feel terrible.

• • • •

He gave me a lovely Christmas present and he is so nice to me that I hate to hurt his feelings by breaking off all of a sudden, but I just don't know what to do. I don't let him see me as often as he would like and he knows I go out with other fellows, but he says he would rather sit home than go out with other girls. I have told him I don't want him to feel that way, but he does—so what can I do? Do you think I should tell him I don't love him and stop seeing him entirely? What makes it so difficult is our working together in the same office. Some days he takes me to lunch and usually he takes me home from work, but I haven't had a planned date with him since early in February.

• • • •

I guess you will think this a very silly letter, but I am really worried. I do want to marry. I love children and I would love a home of my own, but do you think I should marry him for his kindness, and would I perhaps learn to love him after we are married? He can afford to give me a home and he would be a wonderful provider, but I am wondering if that is enough to make one happy. Won't you try to help me solve my problem? WORRIED.

Here's Problem That's Rooted in Personal Vanity.

DEAR WORRIED: My advice to you is not to marry this young man. Why? Because you don't even like him. If you were so much as genuinely fond of him in a companionable way I'm sure his facial expressions wouldn't bother you much; nor would you worry particularly about what his apparent age seemed to be; nor would it matter to you that people are inclined to mistake him for a sissy on first meeting

• • • •

No sensible woman should think of marrying a man for his kindness to her so long as she finds herself overcome with embarrassment at his mannerisms in company; so long as she finds it constantly necessary to apologize for his bad points and call atention to his good ones.

• • • •

The greatest kidness you can do this man is to tell him he hasn't a chance of winning your love. Set him free to find some other girl who will see in him the answer to her maiden's prayer; who will think him in every way the grandest man on earth; who will believe his facial expressions—which you term peculiar—only make him look the more distinguishable.

• • • •

Your interest in this man, as well as your mortification over him, both center in personal vanity. You feel complimented, in a way, that he wants to marry you, but you are thoroughly dissatisfied with the manner of man who pays you the compliment. What it all amounts to is that you are greatly elated at being adored, but secretly ashamed of the man who adores you. Therefore, don't marry him. M. H.

Professor Denies College Education Lowers Birthrate

Married college women have only slightly fewer children than do women of the same social class, who have had no college education, according to Prof. Willystine Goodsell, of Columbia University. Reporting her findings in the March American Journal of Sociology, she contradicts the charge that college education is responsible for the low birth rate among college graduates. Prof. Goodsell suggests that much more complicated social and economic forces are causing limitation of number of children in families of the entire upper middle class.

"If intelligent college graduates, alert to the significance of our decreasing population and our differential birth rate, were to receive positive public support, in the form of economic and social aids, they might deliberately elect to have more children," Prof. Goodsell concludes.

dash of salt

Put orange juice in double boiler, mix sugar, salt and cornstarch and add to hot orange juice. Stir until clear, then cover and cook 5 minutes longer. Remove from heat add lemon juice and butter and serve hot or cold.

3 tablespoons hot water

Mix chocolate or cocoa with hot water. (Scrape the chocolate fine and place over hot water until melted. Cocoa may be blended with water.) Heat the milk and coffee to scalding point in top of double boiler. Add chocolate and sugar and stir until chocolate is smooth. Beat with egg beater until beverage is light and frothy. This recipe will serve six.

Chocolate Mint Dream.

Scald 1 cup milk and in it dissolve 1½ squares chocolate and 4 cream mint wafers. When dissolved beat with a rotary egg beater in order to blend the mixture well. Then add 1 tablespoon gelatine, which has been softened in 2 tablespoons cold water, ½ cup sugar and ¼ teaspoon salt. Cool, add 1 cup cream. Chill, until the mixture begins to congeal and then put the bowl in a pan with a mixture of cracked ice and salt and whip until it will hold its shape. Chill until firm. Unmold, garnish with whipped cream, sprinkled with a few chopped pistachio nuts.

Chocolate Imperial Dessert.

1 piece of cinnamon bark (medium)
1 cup granulated sugar
1½ cups water
2 cups sugar

1 pint whipping cream

Peel, core and slice apples thinly. Boil granulated sugar, water, red coloring matter and cinnamon bark together, 10 minutes, then add sliced apples and simmer until apples are tender and a transparent red. Remove cinnamon bark and let cool.

Mix sugar, cocoa and peanut butter thoroughly. Add enough of the cream to make a very thick creamy consistency. (A dash of salt may be added.) Place the apples in glass dessert cups (save a few pieces), cover with a thick layer of the chocolate mixture, and top with a rosette of whipped cream, made by pressing the cream through a pastry bag. Put a small piece of the apple in the center of each rosette.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Hydrochloric Acid and Asthma.

DURING the last few years the medical attack upon bronchial asthma has undergone radical changes and we now look upon the disorder as a manifestation of an allergic reaction. Whenever the cause can be traced to a single substance and the material removed from contact with the patient, spectacular results follow in many cases. As soon as the symptoms assert themselves an attempt should be made to discover the particular article to which the individual is sensitive.

There are so many substances that can bring on asthmatic symptoms that the greatest difficulty is sometimes encountered in identifying the offender. For example, a patient may choke up with symptoms of asthma in one residence, whereas a change to another part of the city will lead to prompt recovery. On a careful check of each location, a different sort of dust will probably be found. In other words, the irritating elements in the first house are not found in the second.

Causative Factors.

All types of domestic animals, perfumes, smoke plants, face powders, upholstering, window hangings and bed coverings must be considered. If symptoms are observed soon after a meal they can often be traced to a certain food, while seasonal asthma may be caused by pollens or foods plentiful at that time of the year.

Although the search for the causative factor may be instituted at once, a routine physical examination should not be neglected. We must not forget that pus within the patient's own body can give rise to symptoms unassociated with infection. Disease of the sinuses or of the colon or infection about the teeth, tonsils, etc., must be investigated.

A list of drugs that have been recommended for this affliction would fill a sizable volume. Most of them are employed for the purpose of affording temporary relief; to relax the spasms of the smaller bronchial tubes and thus permit the natural flow of air to and from the lungs. Not infrequently the attacks are so severe that adrenalin or even more powerful drugs will need to be administered.

Constant Medical Care.

U. Giles reports the case of an asthmatic who must have been under constant medical supervision for many years. The sinuses had been drained and it had been found necessary to resort to adrenalin, morphine and other drugs to give the patient even the slightest relief. Except when under the control of narcotics, daily attacks occurred. Vaccines prepared from substances to which she was mildly sensitive—and there were many—were without effect.

At this juncture the intravenous use of hydrochloric acid was suggested and the intial dose was 10 cubic centimeters of a 1 to 1,500 solution. This was repeated on the following day, with the result that the frequency of the paroxysms was greatly diminished. During the next nine days there were only occasional spells, each of which was easily controlled by a small dose of adrenalin.

Waffles Dress Up for Spring

You can depend upon waffles to be just as popular during the spring season as they were in the winter. They may not be in demand as a breakfast dish, but this dessert version, pictured above—crisp waffles, whipped cream and orange slices—will carry off top honors as the perfect finale to the salad luncheon.

Gelatin Salad Contest Has Six $1 Prizes

CAN YOU MAKE a gelatin salad that will bring a whiff of spring into the dining room? One that will delight the eye and stimulate jaded appetites? If so, enter your recipe in The Post's contest this week.

Six $1 prizes will be awarded for the best recipes for gelatin salad. Winners will be eligible for one of the four grand prizes, to be given at the end of The Post's series of weekly contests. The grand prizes include an electric waffle set, with matching syrup pitcher, tray, batter bowl and ladle; an electric iron, which has a switch indicating the proper heat for each kind of fabric; an electrically heated casserole, and an electric clock. The series of weekly contests will end the week after Easter.

Entries in this week's contest—for gelatin salads—should be mailed to reach Dorothea Duncan, food editor of The Post, not later than Saturday morning. Prize-winners will be announced the following week.

OYSTER RECIPES.

DOROTHEA DUNCAN'S four prize-winning recipes in the national contest sponsored by the Oyster Institute of North America are now available for Post readers in booklet form. These recipes—all original—include Torch Bearers, an oyster cocktail; Oyster Artesian, Oyster and Mushroom Barbecue and Oyster Fried Pies. Send a stamp to Miss Duncan, care of The Post, for one of these leaflets.

Waffle Has New Role, That of Heavy Dessert

May Be Served After a Light Salad Meal Garnished With Orange Slices and Whipped Cream; Here Are Interesting Recipes.

By Dorothea Duncan.

WHETHER it be spring, winter, summer or fall—the waffle always stands in the limelight of popularity. You have served waffles all during the stormy weather in many of the popular phases, but now you will serve them again in versions that go with spring weather.

When heavy breakfasts are no longer in vogue, the waffle is not discarded because it is not in demand for the first meal of the day. Rather, it is shoved into a more prominent place on the menu.

As the main hot dish for luncheon the waffle will find a conspicuous place. It may be served at noon instead of breakfast with the usual melted butter, syrup, jelly or fine sprinkling of cinnamon and sugar, or you can change the order of service by replacing the usual breakfast accompaniments with creamed chicken, meat or fish.

As a heavy dessert after a light salad meal, however, the waffle will really become famous. When you are tired of the usual desserts—cake, pie, puddings or plain fruit—try in their place one of the delightful dessert versions of the waffle. After a meal of crab meat and avocado salad and crisp crackers, for example, serve orange waffles and coffee for dessert. Prepare them by the following recipe:

Orange Waffles.

(Serves 4 to 6.)

2 eggs, beaten
½ cup sugar
2 teaspoons grated orange rind

Beat these together. Sift:

1¾ cups pastry flour
2½ teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt

Add to first mixture alternately with:

1-3 cup orange juice
1 tablespoon lemon juice

Add:

½ cup melted butter

Cook waffles on ungreased, preheated waffle iron. Serve in sandwich form, putting two or three layers together with filling and topping of slightly sweetened whipped cream or ice cream. Garnish with orange slices or segments. California navel oranges are particularly easy to slice or segment attractively.

Or in the line of spring lucheon desserts serve gingerbread fancies. The recipe follows:

Gingerbread Fancies.

2¼ cups sifted cake flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup dark molasses
1 egg yolk, slightly beaten
1 egg white, stiffly beaten
1½ teaspoons soda
2 teaspoons ginger
½ cup milk
1-3 cup melted butter

Sift flour once, measure, add soda, salt and ginger, and sift again. Combine molasses, milk, and egg yolk. Add to flour mixture gradually, beating only until smooth. Add butter. Blend. Fold in egg white. Bake in a hot waffle iron. Serve with whipped cream. Makes 6 four-section waffles.

If you prefer waffles as a main course instead of dessert, try this recipe:

Cheese Waffles With Grilled Tomatoes.

2 cups sifted cake flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
3 egg yolks, well beaten
4 tablespoons melted butter
3 egg whites, stiffly beaten
1 cup grated cheese

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Combine egg yolks, milk and butter. Add to flour, beating until smooth. Fold in egg whites and cheese. Bake in a hot waffle iron. Place a slice of grilled tomato on each section. Makes 4 four-section waffles. Diced, uncooked bacon may be sprinkled over batter before closing the iron.

New Drapes Will Combat Wanderlust

Touch of Spring in Home Should Accompany Early Robins.

SPRING has come—or at least is well under way, and the question is how to make it come inside. Winter is over and everybody is tired of looking at the same old furniture. It is high time that things looked different, even a little adventurous and exciting.

The best way to inject spring into a room is by new drapes and nothing is so transforming to windows as the new drapery fabric made of cotton ratine and slit cellulose film. It is light, airy and colorful, and most important of all, does not readily show soil. It comes in a variety of colors and designs and will work in well with almost any type of furniture.

Now that winter is over the window should succeed the fireside as the central point of interest in the home. Plan your room around your window and by all means make the window effect as bright, gay and cheerful as possible. For a good many days yet it will have to serve as a substitute for the out-of-doors and it should definitely suggest such youth and growing things.

Slit Cellulose Film Is Effective Fabric at Window.

Old Sheet, Mop And Few Boxes Provide Toys

Children Like to Construct Their Playthings From Mere Skeletons.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

THERE WAS a time when every home was full of the most delightful possibilities for play. Clothes-baskets made ships, pot-covers were excellent shields, and Dad's canes could be used for swords.

Most houses today are too mechanized and compact for such unorganized play, and most children's lives are run by schedule anyway.

But colds and rainy days and periods of quarantine or convalescence still arise, driving parents to distraction with the problem of how to amuse the children. Toys pall because they are for the most part specialized—fitted only for the purpose they were made for.

The ingenious mother, however, need not be at a loss. Even the modern age produces by-products which can be turned to service. What if the clothes are sent to a laundry, and the clothes-basket, therefore, non-existent? The grocer will gladly supply large cartons which he would otherwise throw out, and a few of them will prove a mine of entertainment.

Add to these a sheet or two torn beyond mending, a couple of old mop-sticks, and a ball of cord, and a fleet is ready to sail, or a covered wagon-train to start across the continent. A line of boxes may be made into a train of cars. In fact, the changes which can be rung with such simple material are endless.

Times change and the materials of life change with them, but human nature stays about the same. Children still like to imitate their elders, and to give free rein to their imaginations.

The sophisticated toys can never make the appeal of the toys which the children invent. All the child needs is skeleton material. He will clothe it with the semblance of reality and because it is his own creation will never tire of it.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

IF THE MAN in your family is addicted to home movies, just be glad it isn't blondes. And then set about making a place for his hobby . . . because home movies do take up a certain amount of space. If you don't watch out he'll disrupt the furniture at every party you have with the paraphernalia attached to showing the guests little William's first steps, his bath and his other remarkable achievements.

In most households where there isn't an extra room that can be spared for the purpose, the dining room is the most practcial place for your movies. If the walls are white, the pictures can be projected directly on them. If they are not, then have your screen arranged so that it can be put up or pulled down with the least possible ado . . . then have a compartment in the buffet or cabinet for the projector and experiment to find where it and the screen are best placed to give best effect with the pictures and where chairs for the audience can be placed to see at best advantage. This will save having your living room torn up when there is company . . . besides the chances are you can see the pictures better here.

Of course the ideal place for home movies is a game room. And if movies are a very important part of the family recreation, why not decorate the room with movie posters . . . you can probably get them of famous pictures from your local movie. And you may find them very interesting curios one day . . . think what fun it would be if you had collected posters of Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Pearl White and Thede Bara! Present-day posters will be just as novel some day.

Send a stamp for Miss Boykin's bulletin, "How to Decorate a Game Room."

While working for the benefit of their own parish, the branch has also included in its yearly budget the National Society, Holiday House and Missions. Dramatics and various entertainments, including several minstrel shows, a fashion show, bazaars, dances, a country fair, have been outstanding features. During bicentennial year a group of Colonial plays were given in appropriate costumes made in the branch and featuring the dancing of the minuet.

Members have taken part in diocesan and other conferences and events. Two have been honored by the diocese in being chosen Member Delegate—Miss Florence Davidson, 1930-33, and Louise Smith, 1936-39. Miss Zug, branch president, is also secretary of the Diocesan Council.

Fruit Juices Increase Ways Of Using Eggs

Combination Will Provide New Menus for the Lenten Period.

DURING LENT many housewives feel that they have exhausted every conceivable way of using eggs. But if the family has tired of them in more substantial forms there remains their use with fruit juices. This combination provides a splendid way of supplying the nutritional elements of both eggs and fruit in the diet.

An unusual combination of lemon juice, eggs and milk is found in a simple pudding. As served, the top will have a yellow custard-like jelly with a delicate, moist crumb underneath not unlike sponge cake.

Lemon Lusch (six servings).

1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons flour
¼ teaspoon salt
2 eggs, separated
Juice and rind of 1 lemon
1 cup milk

Mix sugar, flour and salt. Beat egg whites until stiff, but not dry. Then beat yolks, add about one-third of the milk. Beat in gradually the mixed dry ingredients. Add remaining milk, rind and juice of the lemon. Beat thoroughly. Fold in the beaten whites. Do not stir or fold until all the lumps have disappeared. Pour into buttered loaf pan, ring mold or individual molds. Pan should be about three-fourths full. Set in a pan of hot water and bake about one hour in a slow oven (325 degrees Fahrenheit). Cool before removing from the pan. Remove from mold and serve upside down with or without whipped cream.

For another fruit juice and egg combination that will find particular favor with the youngsters of the family try:

Orange Fluff.

4 eggs, separated
6 tablespoons powdered sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
Juice and rind of 1 orange
Juice and rind of 1 lemon
2 tablespoons hot water
Sponge or angel food cake strips, or lady fingers

Beat egg whites until stiff, but not dry. Add salt and two tablespoons of the sugar, continue beating until sugar is well incorporated and the meringue peaks. Beat yolks with the remaining sugar (4 tablespoons), add fruit juice, rind and hot water. Cook in double boiler, stirring constantly until it thickens. Beat into the meringue. Cool. Arrange in individual dessert dishes lined with the sponge or angel food cake strips, or lady fingers. Chill.

Revival of Needle Art Work Urged

Tapestry Designs of Old Days Promoted.

St. Petersburg, Fla. (AP).—Mrs. Blanche Alexander is spending much of her time these days helping to revive an art that flourished 400 years ago—needlepoint tapestry.

It consists, she explains, in painting pictures first with brush and paint, then finishing them in tapestry with needle and thread.

Tracing its history from 2,000 B. C., she finds hope for its revival in the growing list of proponents of the art.

Among them, she says, Edward VIII, King of England, is proficient in needlepoint tapestry.

Jobs for Women Increased in 1935

A gain in jobs for women is reported for 1935 by the Bureau of Part-Time Work of New York City. Twice as many jobs for women were filled in 1935 as in 1934. The annual total of positions has decreased yearly from 1930 through 1934.

One of the short-day jobs filled was that of dean in a woman's college at $2,400 a year on the part-time basis. Others included dietitians, physical therapists, laboratory technicians and trained and practical nurses. Recently a department was opened for domestic workers.

Paprika Provides Warmth in Salads

Cayenne Also Adds Zest to Otherwise Dull Courses.

If the men in your family sniff at the salad course and call it "rabbit food"—try putting some he-man flavor into the dressing.

A teaspoon of Spanish paprika, thoroughly blended into each tablespoon of mayonnaise, for instance, will give just a hint of warmth that is most pleasing. It also will add an attractive touch of vivid color.

This combination does wonders not only for the taste of bland salads, but sets off those which are pale by nature in their ingredients.

Waldorf salad, sliced pear salad, cole slaw and other mixtures that are mainly white, are made twice as good to look at, as well as twice as good to eat. If a sharper flavor is desired, add a few grains of cayenne to the paprika when blending it with the dressing.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

To keep artichokes firm and green add half a lemon to the water in which they are cooked.

Sweet pickles wrapped in thin slices of baked ham are excellent in buns to be served on picnics.

To mayonnaise which is fairly sweet, add tomato catsup, diced hard boiled egg, chopped celery and a suggestion of onion. Serve this dressing on a head of lettuce.

Fried chicken should be placed on heavy brown paper when it is removed from the pan. The paper will absorb the excess fat, leaving the chicken crisp.

When making fruit pies, cut the upper crust a half inch larger than the lower, and fold the edges under the lower to prevent the juice from running out of the pie.

Before washing a woolen sweater, cut a paper pattern the shape and size of the garment. Then after washing it carefully block the sweater to match this pattern and dry it flat.

'Cube' Sandwiches Help at Tea Time

Ann Harding Also Tells How to Make "Deckers."

"Three-decker sandwiches for tea-time is an idea for the worried hostess who is looking for something new to serve her guests," says Ann Harding, motion picture actress.

"Sandwiches to be served at a party should have color and variety. Color is fairly simple. Use many kinds of bread, white, wholewheat, dark brown and nut bread. Garnish them with olive slices, nuts, pimento.

"Variety, however, is a little harder to achieve. That is why I suggest three-deckers. They are a little unexpected at tea. Use very thin bread, remove the crusts and cut the sandwiches quite small."

Thick sandwiches also have their place at tea, according to Miss Harding. She cuts fresh bread in cubes measuring a trifle more than an inch on each side. Round "wells" are cut into these cubes and filled with peanut butter, cheese, meat mixtures, jam or jelly. Then the cube is toasted.

"Here is another sandwich I like," the star continued. "Prepare a mixture of sugar, chopped nuts and some spice, possibly cinnamon. Butter the bread, dust with this mixture and brown. Serve hot."

Cleaning of Winter Clothing Vital as One Turns to Spring

Discarded Heavier Garments Should Be Thoroughly Moth-Proofed Before Placed in Storage to Await Return of Cold.

WHEN THE FIRST warm days cause us to change to spring-weight coats, thinner suits and lighter bedding, it's time to take precaution against moths. The things we remove from circulation are in danger of moth attack unless they are cleaned and properly put away immediately. The cleaning is important because it is one way of dislodging any moth eggs that may already be in the articles, and it is practical because if we do it now the things will be ready to take out and use at the first hint of cold fall weather. Dry cleaning kills all moths.

The theory of safe storage is simply to shut the parent moths out and keep them shut out. It is more a matter of absolutely tight packages than of repellent smells. The fragrant aroma of cedar, pine, tar, camphor or napthalene does not destroy either moths or partly grown larvae. The fumes of napthalene flakes, and also paradichlorobenzene crystals, if confined in proper amounts, will kill the larvae, should any hatch in the package or chest from unnoticed eggs.

So it is just as well to use these substances when putting garments or other articles away, even though they have been thoroughly cleaned, brushed, sunned and aired first.

It's no use to scatter these flakes in a closet or bureau drawer if these are left unsealed. The fumes must be confined to kill the moth worms. Well-made cedar chests with tight lids also kill newly hatched larvae, but older worms may live in spite of a chest if they are in a garment when it is put away.

A simple way of shutting out moths, entomologists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture recommend, is to wrap articles, or the boxes containing them, in strong, unbroken wrapping paper, after scattering naphthalene flakes or paradichlorobenzene crystals between the folds of the garment, then seal all openings and edges with gummed paper. Garment bags are good if there is no way the moths can get in—particularly where the hanger comes through.

Feasts, Song And Oratory Extoll Erin

Distinguished Leaders Attend St. Patrick's Day Banquet.

Rain Fails to Dampen Spirit of Wearers o' the Green.

The sons of Erin yesterday celebrated with feast and song and high-flown oratory the glory of Ireland and the memory of St. Patrick.

The anniversary of their patron saint was undampened for the wearers of the Shamrock by the downpour, and festivities continued from 9:30 a. m. on.

The day of gayety was climaxed last night by the dinners of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and the Ancient Order of Hibernians at the Mayflower Hotel.

300 Attend Fete.

Nearly 300 members and distinguished guests of the former, including Supreme Court Justice McReynolds, Speaker of the House Byrns and several Senators and Representatives, enjoyed four hours of music, song, drama and speeches.

"We are in a period of transition," John Crosby, former assistant United States Attorney General told his listeners. "Three great peoples of the earth have sacrificed liberty for bread.

"But if the day of despotism ever comes to this country there will be no doubt on which side the Irishman will stand. Irishmen will never concede that liberty can ever become a hindrance to mankind."

Col. Arthur O'Brien, president of the society, which was founded before the Revolution, extolled the democratic principles of the ancient Kingdom of Ireland.

"There and there alone," he said, "is to be found among the feudal states of medieval Europe the theory of the relation between man and government which is contained in our own Declaration of Independence and our Constitution."

John J. Burns, counsel of the Securities and Exchange Commission, said that the epoch of Irish immigration to this country was over because at last peace has come to the land of Erin. He pointed out that only 314 "greenhorns" had come to America from the mother country last year.

Play Revives Old Songs.

The guests were regaled for over an hour by "The Prodigal Son-in-Law," this year's play of the society's dramatic group. Actors garbed in the native costumes of the last century, used the drama as a background for the singing of famous Irish songs.

Daniel J. Callahan was toastmaster and the annual dinner was opened by an invocation by the Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, president of Georgetown University.

More than 800 members and guests of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and its Ladies' Auxiliary attended its dinner and dance. The dinner was interspersed with solos, instrumental music and community singing.

Representative Edward J. Hart, of New Jersey, the main speaker, told of the contribution of St. Patrick to Irish and world civilization.

"St. Patrick's work," he said, "made the Irish Celt the most scholarly and cultivated people of the early Middle Ages."

Leo A. Craven, president of the order, and Theresa E. Collins, District president of the Ladies' Auxiliary, made short address. Patrick H. O'Dea was toastmaster of the evening.

Order Attends Mass.

The order was the first in the city to celebrate the anniversary. At 9:30 a. m. it gathered at the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception at Catholic University for organ presentations of Irish songs and solemn mass by Mgr. David T. O'Dwyer in memory of the shepherd boy who rose to be the greatest hero of his country.

Post 17 of the Irish War Veterans gathered in front of the statue of Commodore John Barry, in Franklin Park, later in the morning, to do honor to that son of County Wexford who beame the scourge of the British men of war during the Revolution.

Among the honor guard was Sergt. Hugh K. McGrath, 95-year-old veteran of the Indian, Civil and Spanish-American wars. Edward J. J. McGrory, post commander, placed a wreath at the Barry statue, and Representative Michael Stack, of Pennsylvania, Irish-born, said:

"I dare you to find me a man of Irish blood who will not fight to the last gasp."

Members of the Civitan Club gathered at the Hotel Lafayette under the green flag and the golden Harp of Tara for a St. Patrick's Day luncheon and to hear John Walsh, former counsel of the Federal Trade Commission, talk on "Ireland and America."

In the afternoon the Washington Kiwanis Club sponsored a program at the Tuberculosis Hospital, at which the Chesapeake & Potomac Co. Glee Club sang Irish songs for the 227 patients.

Dinner March 26 Will Honor Rubel

The Connecticut Avenue Association will honor its retiring president, Lawrence E. Rubel, at a dinner March 26 in the Mayflower Hotel.

C. A. Martin, the newly elected president, will officiate at the banquet. Plans for the fifth semi-annual fashion show and style exhibit which is to be held April 5 at the Mayflower will be discussed. There will also be a program of entertainment.

Coroner's Jury Holds McNamara in Murder

After listening to testimony in the case of 20-year-old William McNamara (sitting above, between the policemen), a coroner's jury ordered the soda clerk held in the slaying of a cafe chef in an attempt on the life of McNamara's wife. Attorney Frank Kelley leans over to talk to the defendant.

Boy Husband Held for Jury In Cafe Killing

McNamara Is Accused of Shooting 2 in Volley Intended for Wife.

William McNamara, 20, who hitchhiked here Saturday from his home in Petersburg, Va., allegedly to effect a reconciliation with his wife or kill her, was found responsible for the death of John Mikedis, 54, lunchroom chef, and ordered held for grand jury action by a coroner's jury yesterday.

The 20-year-old soda clerk slumped in his chair yesterday at the District Morgue with his wife, Ruth, whom he is accused of having tried to kill, just a few feet away, while Park Policeman A. S. Moreau related how McNamara killed the chef and seriously wounded another man in the Liberty Cafe, 804 K street northwest.

Moreau testified he was eating in the restaurant when he heard the sound of four shots in the kitchen. He said he pulled out his gun and went back there.

Mrs. Ruth McNamara ran from the kitchen as he entered, Moreau told the jury. He said he started to assist Samuel Ally, 41, owner of the cafe who had been shot, when Ally stopped him, pleading: "Officer, officer, arrest that man. He shot me." Ally suffered bullet wounds in the chest and right leg.

Seized McNamara.

Moreau explained that he seized McNamara and held him until the police and homicide squad detectives arrived. Mikedis was pronounced dead. Ally is recovering in Emergency Hospital.

Detective Sergt. Aubrey M. Tolson, of the homicide squad, who investigated the case, told the jury McNamara declared he had married Ruth about four years ago. Tolson quoted the youth as saying there had been many quarrels, and they had separated. Last Friday, Tolson said McNamara told him, the youth telephoned his wife that he had arranged with his attorney for a divorce, and asked her to come to Petersburg.

Mrs. McNamara telephoned her husband's lawyer, and discovered no steps had been taken to obtain a divorce. She decided not to go to Petersburg.

When her husband learned of this, Sergt. Tolson stated, he started for Washington at once. Investigation showed the youth had purchased bullets for his gun before leaving Petersburg, the detective said.

McNamara went to the cafe, where his wife was employed as a waitress, and they went for a walk to discuss a divorce. Mrs. McNamara had keys to Ally's car, and her husband resented this, Tolson said.

Returned to Restaurant.

They could not reach an agreement, and returned to the restaurant. McNamara went into the kitchen, where he demanded that Ally discharge his wife, so she would return to him. Ally rebuked the youth, who pulled a gun and began firing, the detectve related.

Mrs. McNamara took the stand and related the events leading up to the shooting. She corroborated the policeman's statements. She denied having been in Ally's room, and stated she ran when the shooting started.

Miss Frances Buchanan, cashier, and Miss Cecilia Kolwalska testified to the fact that Ally and McNamara had talked together amiably earlier in the evening.

Frank J. Kelly, attorney for the defendant, brought out that Ally had threatened to dismiss Mrs. McNamara that night.

Optometrists Meet Today.

Candidate Freed Of Hacking Charge

Howard M. Overstreet, former policeman who resigned to run for the Presidency, was given a suspended sentence yesterday when he was found guilty of operating a taxi without a license.

Overstreet may never get to the White House, but he was recognized as a candidate when he was booked at the Traffic Division as "Howard M. Overstreet, Presidential candidate." The identification was later changed to hacker.

The former policeman denied the charge placed against him by Hack Inspector J. L. Navars, who said he arrested Overstreet while he was operating the cab.

Overstreet told Police Court Judge Isaac R. Hitt that he had his automobile painted like a taxi, and had made application for a hacker's license since he left the police force. He said he had gone to a friend's house to get his wife. Judge Hitt found Overstreet guilty, but suspended sentence.

Permit to Run New Type Bus Is Sought Here

The Arlington & Fairfax Railway Co. yesterday sought permission from the Public Utilities Commission of the District to operate a new type of vehicle from downtown Washington into Virginia.

The vehicles, described as "autorailer," is motor driven. It would operate as a bus through the streets of Washington, and over the railroad tracks of the company from the terminus at the south end of Key Bridge through Arlington and Fairfax counties in Virginia.

"The lines of the applicant," the petition said, "serve an extensive territory which is not served by any other practicable convenient means of transportation to Georgetown and the center of Washington, but is unable in its present situation to furnish the through transportation to which travelers to and from those sections are entitled."

From the rail terminus at the bridge, the company proposed to operate its new type vehicles over the bridge to M street, to Pennsylvania avenue, to Twenty-third or Twenty-fourth street, thence south to Virginia avenue, to Constitution avenue, to Seventh street, to C street northwest to the termina in the "bus center" at Sixth and C streets. Outbound vehicles would run south on Sixth street to Constitution avenue and thence over the route followed by inbound buses.

J. H. Parmelee, president of the company, who signed the petition, told the commission "it is planned to operate not more than three buses per hour, except during the peak hours, and then on a headway of about ten minutes."

Because the new service within the District would come in direct competition with the Capital Transit Co., and would also involve question of traffic congestion, William A. Roberts, people's counsel, asked the commission not to act on the proposal before holding a public hearing.

E. P. Butscher Dies; Ex-G.P.O. Employe

Edward Pulaski Butscher, who retried in 1932 after 39 years as an employe of the Government Printnig Office, died yesterday at his home in Maryland Courts.

Born August 25, 1865, a native of Philadelphia, he came to Washington in May, 1893, to accept an appointment as a bookbinder in the Government Printing Office. Citizens Forum Fights 'Buying' Of Zone Pleas Columbia Heights Group Indorses Anti-Red Rider Repeal; Others Meet.

A resolution—designed to forestall "purchase" of signatures from persons in residential sections by corporations which wish a change in zoning of a property was passed by the Citizens Forum of Columbia Heights, at its meeting in Powell Junior High School last night.

The resolution urged that names of persons solicited for their consent to a zoning change be submitted to the Zoning Commission of the District. The Commission then would have the right to either refuse or grant the change.

The Sisson Bill for repeal of the anti-red rider was indorsed. The report of the executive committee of the group stated: "no evidence of Communistic teachings has been produced. The teachers are humiliated by having to take an oath every month stating they have not taught Communism."

Legalization of horse racing at Benning was disapproved. A. M. Edwards, in charge of the committee investigating the proposal, said: "An influx of undesirable persons would be brought into the District. Persons who could ill afford to gamble would be wasting their money on this vice."

Petworth Citizens Meet.

The Petworth Citizens Association, meeting at Petworth School last night, adopted a resolution asking for new fire equipment and for the addition of 15 men to the department personnel.

The group went on record as favoring the institution of publicly owned parking lots to alleviate bad parking conditions in the streets. They also approved a resolution that would prohibit parking on through streets during rush hours.

Miss Bertie Backus, assistant superintendent of schools, addressed the meeting on "Character Education." Miss Backus outlined work that had been done toward helping backward students and also showed how sane educational methods assisted gifted students maladjusted through bad home surroundings or other circumstances.

Southeast Council Gathers.

The Southeast Council of Citizens Associations last night voted their confidence in Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou and the members of the Board of Education.

William Maio, president of the council, said: "Anyone who ever had any dealings with Dr. Ballou knows well that he does not, in any way, favor Communism.

A motion to have a George Washington University professor discuss Communism at the council's next meeting was tabled when it was pointed out that the meeting would be in a public school building and that such discussion might be in violation of the anti-red rider.

J. L. Gammel, representing the Lincoln Park Citizens Association, was made chairman of a committee to examine possibilities of dividing the Eleventh Police Precinct into two precincts.

Murray to Give Taik.

Senator James E. Murray, Democrat, of Montana, will speak on the international munitions industry and means for its control at the semi-monthly panel forum of the Y. M. C. A. tomorrow night at 8 p. m. in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, 18th and G streets northwest.

Future Wars Bonus Drive Called 'Crazy'

But Rep. Maverick Hails Plan as 'Swell' and He's For It.

Washington patriots and lawmakers got hot under the collar yesterday over formation of the Veterans of Future Wars at Princeton University.

Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, U. S. A., retired, epitomized the majority viewpoint when he described the ironic demand of the students for a $1,000 bonus now on the war they expect to fight later as "just a damned fool idea."

The lone voice of approval was raised by fiery young Representative Maverick (Democrat), of Texas, himself a wounded and decorated World War veteran.

"Scheme Is Swell," He Says.

"I think their scheme is swell," he said.

"I'm willing to vote to give them $10,000,000,000 any old day. Those kids have a lot of good sense because they know if we paid for our wars in advance we wouldn't have any wars.

"If they keep their organization going they may prevent a lot of their members from getting killed some day."

Gen. Fries, however, insisted the Veterans of Future Wars deserved condemnation.

"That society," he said, "was gotten up as a joke to cast reflection on the American Legion and isn't worthy of any serious thought. It's just a prank and ought to be considered as such."

University of Virginia Organizes.

As several other members of Congress ridiculed the college movement, word came from Charlottesville of the formation of a new chapter of the veterans at the University of Virginia.

A petition posted there, the Associated Press reported, proclaimed:

"We, the undersigned students of the University of Virginia, hereby respectfully petition for the right to establish a chapter of this patriotic organization in Charlottesville.

"We do hereby affirm that we will work faithfully to secure passage by Congress of a bill which will authorize the immediate payment of a cash bonus of $1,000 to every member of the Veterans of Future Wars."

Representative William D. McFarlane (Democrat), Texas, declared the new organization "ought to be investigated."

"If these misguided boys really want to form an organization," he said, "let them start a league to compel our 23,000-odd millionaires to cough up in taxes the bloody money they accumulated in the last war.

"Tools of Wall Street."

"I'm afraid this chicken-hearted organization is made up of publicity-seeking boys who don't realize they are defeating their own purpose. They are just the tools of Wall street coupon clippers."

Representative Simon Hamlin (Democrat), Maine, said he knew little about the new movement, "but the Government is paying enough pensions already."

He said the Administration "will go to any extreme to maintain neutrality" and insisted that only an everwhelming public opinion could lead this country to war.

J. D. Chittenden, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, declared:

"Service men are wondering what Hobey Baker and Johnnie Poe, as well as other alumni of Princeton who died in France, might say to this apparent insult to their service."

Unsolicited, Walter Turner, of the Hay-Adams House, called The Post to say:

"This is the most ridiculous thing I ever heard of. It is typical of college students. They are amateurish and need discipline. I went to college and I know."

Diphtheria Takes Life Of 10th Victim in 1936

5-Year-Old's Death Under Tragic Circumstances Emphasizes Danger of Health 'Economy;' Lack of Funds Ends Immunity Service.

With public health items sharply reduced in the 1937 District supply bill that has passed the House, the campaign for adequate appropriations now veers to the Senate. The Washington Post desires that this city have the best public health conveniences in the Nation. This is one of a series of articles designed to show Congress the District's health needs.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Diphtheria, childhood plague which dollars can make as rare as rabies or scurvy, has taken the life of another Washington child.

The death of Jimmy ——, 5 years old, was reported yesterday to the Health Department. His case, a particularly tragic one, paradoxically illustrates the life-saving potentialities of a municipal public health service which is not strait-jacketed by "economy."

A week ago Jimmy was playing around the house, getting into mischief and doing the other things common to any healthy 5-year-old. A day or two later he felt slightly sick. Nothing serious, though, or so it seemed.

Diphtheria is treacherous that way. Simple to prevent and not especially difficult to check if diagnosed early, it attacks the system almost painlessly. A mild fever, perhaps, and a somewhat scratchy throat. The horrors, which often include strangulation, are diabolically reserved for the final stages.

Four days Jimmy was sick at home. Last Saturday he developed a cough and loss of appetite. Next day a physician was summoned. He ordered the boy to the hospital immediately. Too late. Jimmy died early Monday morning. Yesterday Dr. James G. Cumming, chief of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, noted the tenth notch in the diphtheria mortality table for 1936.

Jimmy had not been immunized, as far as the admitting hospital could learn, and so he was an easy prey for the disease tha talready this year has stricken 305 persons, the majority of them pre-school children. In all of 1933 there were only 388 cases reported to the District Health Department.

A child to whom the preventive toxoid is administered will not contract diphtheria. Exceptions are so few as to be negligible. When these pre fo rthe disease that already show the fault was man's rather than the medicine's.

Whether Jimmy's needless death may be attributed directly to Congressional failure to provide adequately for the Capital City's public health service is speculative. Not speculation, but cold feet, is the situation that arose last spring when the Health Department, which had far too little in the first place, ran out of toxoid funds.

It should have been mentioned earlier that the department, to the best of its scrawny resources, performs Shick tests and administers toxoids at child hygiene centers, in the schools and at the vaccination clinic.

So last spring the money ran out. The diphtheria season was worse than usual and its severity was matched by the volume of parents, financially unable to pay for the service, who demanded protection of their children.

When the dollars gave out there was the one logical result. The service stopped. Maybe Jimmy was among those who had the door shut in his face. Likely he was not.

That the doors were reopened, after a brief interruption of the life-saving work, was due not to governmental intervention but to a $200 donation by an anonymous giver. The District, fortunately for hundreds of little boys and girls, was not too proud to accept charity and so the work was resumed.

Subsequently the American Legion contributed $300 to be used for the same purpose—supplement regular appropriations for the prevention and control of diphtheria. Of the $200, all but $40 has been used. The $300 gift is as yet untouched, health authorities saying that they hope to squeeze through the remainder of this fiscal year on the orthodox budget.

This time last year, 132 cases of diphtheria and eight deaths had been reported. At noon yesterday the figures stood, respectively, at 305 and ten. If its functions were suitably recognized by the Budget Bureau and Congress and corresponding appropriations made, the Health Department could reduce this cascade of death, torture and injurious after-effects to a trickle.

The 1937 District supply bill, as it awaits consideration by the Senate, slashes the estimates for preventable disease control, which includes diphtheria immunization.

Jimmy shall not be without company.

Short Weight Laid To 2 Coal Sellers

Two men, charged with selling coal at short weights, were released on bond yesterday after they had been arrested by W. C. Diller, chief of the Weights and Measures Bureau.

The men, Buford Scivally, 38, of 811 Maryland avenue, northeast, and Frank Metzger, of Sunbury, Pa., were placed under $200 and $500 bonds, respectively.

Diller said the men had delivered two "tons" of coal. One delivered on Milmarson place northwest was 887 pounds short, he said, while another was sent to J. H. Smith, 1347 Irving street northwest, an agent for the Weights Bureau. The coal delivered to Smith is alleged to have been 695 pounds short.

ABC to Study Liquor Credit To Retailers

Commissioners Approve Reduction of Class A Licenses to 300.

Investigation of charges that wholesale liquor dealers were "carrying" many retailers on extended credit was launched by Commissioner George E. Allen yesterday.

Information on the extension of unusal credit privileges was asked of the Beverage Board in a memorandum sent by Allen following a public hearing at which the Commissioners, despite Allen's dissent, voted to reduce the number of Class A retailers from the present 400 to 300.

George W. Offutt, jr., Beverage Board chairman, said the requested investigation would be launched at once.

Manuel Davis, attorney for the Exclusive Retail Liquor Dealers Association, precipitated the matter when he protested against the proposal to fix arbitrarily the number of retailers at 300.

Urges Cash Proviso.

"There are plenty of wholesalers carrying plenty of retailers through extending credit," Davis said. "If you want to reduce the number of retailers you can do it by requiring retailers to pay for their supplies in cash."

Jerome B. McKee, formerly president of the association, agreed that "plenty of retailers would have to go out of business if they had to pay cash."

Allen, who fought hard against the proposed 300 limit, inquired if such extension of credit was not in violation of the law which was designed to prevent too close relationship between makers, wholesalers, and retailers of alcoholic beverages. Offutt and Vernon E. West, principal assistant corporation counsel, said the law permitted extension of "reasonable credit."

Denies Accusation.

Milford Schwartz, attorney for the Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association, denied wholesalers were "carrying" any number of retailers. He added that under the proposed arbitrary limit on retail licenses, wholesalers might conclude that a lone retailer in a large area might be a better credit risk than if he had more competition.

Members of his association, Schwartz said, had no objection to the proposal to forbid transfer of licenses, except they wished the Commissioners to consider the right of an individual who had built up a good business to reap his profits from a sale of his business.

Reduction in the number of licenses was recommended by the Beverage Board. It is proposed to reach the new maximum by refusing to issue any new licenses. It was estimated it would be eight years before there would be an opening for a new license. Maj. Jerome E. Johnstone, Beverage Board investigator, cited figures to show how little profit now was being made because of the competition. The average last year was not more than $5,000, he said.

Liquor sold in the District last year, judged by the tax stamps sold, Offutt said, amounted to 2,042,551 gallons of liquor and fortified wines. On the basis of a population of 550,000 this represented a per capita consumption of 3.71 gallons.

Dill Urges Reduction.

Former Senator Clarence C. Dill, of Washington, urged the reduction in behalf of the Food and Beverage Stores Association. George E. Sullivan, an ardent dry, asked reduction in the limit on behalf of the Federation of Citizens Associations. Paul E. Jamison followed suit on behalf of the Burroughs Citizens Association.

There is a "definite public sentiment in the District for upholding the hands of the berevage board in its efforts to limit liquor consumption," Miss Elizabeth E. Harris, chairman of the legislative committee of the women's organization for District of Columbia liquor control, told the commissioners.

Irvin S. Cobb Makes Debut as Individual Star in Film Play Already Familiar

Humorist Does Well in Drama Arliss Played

Would Take Rogers' Place; More About Folk Opera; Amusement Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

In his first individual starring vehicle, "Everybody's Old Man," that brilliant novelist, short story writer, wit and moderately good actor, Irvin S. Cobb, will find himself slightly handicapped by the fact that Darryl F. Zanuck and Twentieth Century-Fox have supplied him with a story that represents nothing more novel and original that a rewrite of George Arliss' "The Working Man," produced by Warner Brothers and released in April, 1933.

There are, to be sure, a few minor modifications in the yarn of the big business man who takes over his late rival's son and daughter and goes into active competition with his own giant business, which he has left, in the meantime, under the control of a young nephew who, while a capable executive, is overstuffed with egotism, but in every important particular they are identical. In fact, they are one and the same story, written by Edgar Franklin, with the present version adapted to the screen by Patterson McNutt and A. E. Thomas, whereas the Arliss picture was adapted by Charles Kenyon and Maude T. Howell.

Locales Are Changed.

Among the unimportant changes that have been made in the structure of the story is the shift of the meeting place of the vacationing millionaire and the wastrel children of his old rival from a Maine fishing village and the roisterers' yacht to Europe and Le Rat Mort Cafe in Paris. There is also the inconsequential matter of changing the play's industry from shoe manufacturing to canned foods. Otherwise, if you saw "The Working Man," you already have seen "Everybody's Old Man."

But the principal problem that is posed by the Twentieth Century-Fox people immediately the picture has been viewed, is whether Irvin S. Cobb is the logical successor of Will Rogers in roles of hard common sense, gentle sentiment and pungent humor. Mr. Cobb, it may be said, comes very much nearer being another Will Rogers than he does another George Arliss! His methods are homely, unpolished—although never uncouth—and he affects the Rogers' hair-comb, insofar as his thinning locks will permit, and that comedian's indifference to sartorial elegance. There, however, the resemblance may be said to end. Witty as he is in print, Cobb lacks the dryly incisive humor that was Rogers' in speech.

If Not Cobb, Who?

No one comes to mind, an hour after having previewed "Everybody's Old Man" in the private projection room of the Fox Film Exchange, who could do very much better in the rough-and-ready interpretation of the part that the role of William Franklin logically demands.

It seems to me it would be enough if the star of this picture would be content to be Irvin S. Cobb, without attempting to fill the particular niche in the movie world once occupied by a homely philosopher whose place nobody ever will be able to take acceptably.

There are many deft and amusing touches in "Everybody's Old Man," other than those contributed by the star. These will be considered in the formal review of this familiar subject in this space Saturday morning, after the film's local opening as chief feature of the screen portion of the program at Loew's Fox Theater, beginning Friday.

It is a considerably gayer subject than Mr. Arliss' edition of the same story, if that is a hint of any value.

Yesterday turned out to be visitors' day at the drama desk, following the afternoon preview of "Everybody's Old Man." Three old friends dropped by to say "hello" and, incidentally, plant a few vagrant thoughts in the editorial mind—if any—concerning the merits of their respective attractions, all scheduled for Washington in the near future.

These genial cymbal-whangers were Sam Stratton, avant couriering in the interests of "At Home Abroad," in which Beatrice Lillie, Herb Williams, Mitzi Mayfair and Ethel Waters are to be seen at the National beginning next Monday night; that ubiquitous and incorrigible space-grabber, Norman Pyle, of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer publicity and exploitation department, already on hand to herald the coming of the film production of "The Great Ziegfeld" to the National as a two-a-day attraction, opening with an 8:30 p. m. presentation on Sunday night, April 19, and William Fields, promoting mass interest in Maxwell Anderson's play, "Winterset," which will be along between the two offerings to which his confreres are devoting their sagacious ministrations.

These boys are apt to be around, more or less, for the next several days. I'm afraid!

Afterthoughts on "Porgy."

Even with so erudite a confederate as Ray C. B. Brown to share the burden, there are so many elements of unusual "theater" in the production of George Gershwin's new folk opera of "Porgy and Bess," current at the National Theater, that did not get into yesterday's review, that it may be permissible to pick up the scattered threads left dangling by the rush of a harried midnight race against a deadline.

It seemed to me, for example, although this really belongs on Mr. Brown's side of the column rule, that Alexander Steinert conducted both his augmented orchestra and the singers on the stage through the intricacies of Mr. Gershwin's complex score with fine intelligence and restraint—a restraint that even was exerted over the audience in one instance, when it became necessary to "shush" those out front into something remotely resembling quiet after the chatter of the entr'acte. A more complete instrumentation, one suspects, would have made his work more obviously expert. The orchestra pit at the National is none too large even with one row of chairs removed.

The Buoyant Bubbles.

Then there is the matter of John W. Bubbles and his vaudeville technique, which he miraculously transfers to the more substantial precincts of opera with no jarring note whatsoever. This is a feat that can not be too highly extolled. Bubbles, half of the team of Buck & Bubbles, has practically no singing voice, yet he contrives to make "It Ain't Necessarily So," in the second scene of the second act, one of the impressive numbers of Mr. Gershwin's pretentious score.

There is another member of the cast who brings long and honorable experience to the portrayal of an important role in one comparatively brief scene—J. Rosamond Johnson, who plays Frazier, the lawyer, who encounters a slight complication in selling Bess a divorce from Crown for $1 when he learns they never were married. In view of this extra tax on his legal acumen, he charges her $1.50!

Half of Famous Team.

Unless my memory is as bad as I think it is, J. Rosamond Johnson, years ago, was half of the team of Cole and Johnson, the only serious threats Bert Williams and George Walker ever had in the theater, when both teams were the ace representatives of their race in vaudeville and musical comedy. Again, if I have my memory on straight, he was at the Fox a season or two ago with Joe Laurie's old-timers' revue.

It was eminently unfair yesterday to pay tribute to Rouben Mamoulian's direction without at the same time recognizing the extraordinary effectiveness of the settings for "Porgy and Bess" designed by Sergei Soudeikine. They are as realistic as the performances of the able players and singers who appear before them.

"Porgy and Bess", by the way, closes its season Saturday night at the conclusion of its final Washington performance.

By one of those inexplicable decisions that upsets the apple cart completely as far as earlier announcements have been concerned, the New York home office of Loew's, Inc., yesterday informed the local management that Charlie Chaplin's new and long-awaited picture, "Modern Times," will open on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater on Saturday of this week, instead of Friday. The reason for the one-day postponement is not known; one guess is as good as another. Perhaps they want to give Charlie and Paulette Goddard a chance to catch their breaths after being married in Singapore today—if they are—before beginning to worry about the Washington run of the picture.

Well, I told you one guess was as good as another. So what?

Capra's Capstone.

One solid year of preparation for the filming of a single picture will end next week when the cameras start grinding on "Lost Horizon," Frank Capra's most ambitious undertaking for Columbia. Ronald Colman will be starred.

During the course of production, scheduled for at least two months, practically every stage of the Hollywood studios will be used for the gigantic Tibetan sets, and, in addition, practically all of the many exteriors will be filmed on one of the largest outdoor sets ever built. This setting, at the Columbia ranch in the San Fernando Valley, will represent a lamasery and garden approximately of the proportions of two city blocks, solidly built up.

Jane Wyatt, New York socialite stage and screen actress, has been signed for the leading feminine role in support of Colman. Others recently contracted include Isabel Jewel and Edward Everett Horton. Hundreds of other featured and "bit" players will be added as production progresses.

"Lost Horizon" also will prove a godsend to the extra people. It is estimated that more than 2,000 extras will be employed at various times.

Robert Riskin wrote the screen adaptation of James Hilton's best-selling novel. The Messrs. Capra, Riskin and Colman, reading in the usual direction, make very few mistakes.

Honest-Confession Note.

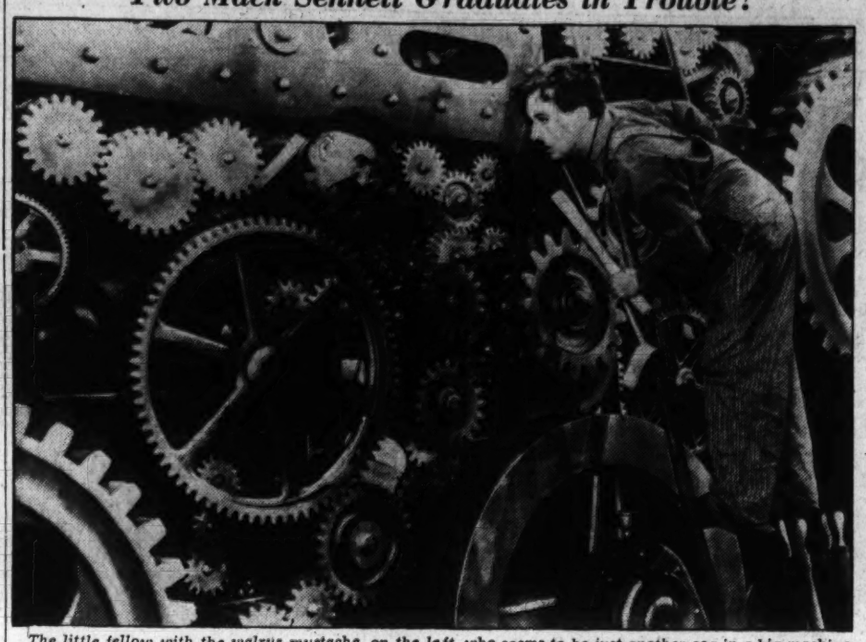
One of mine was ever starting to tag on these last lines!

So today there won't be any.

Unless you can do with the observation that what we had yesterday and last night probably was just a touch of the infernal equinox—equi, from the Latin word meaning horse; nox, meaning night.

Yeah, nightmare! Especially if you didn't have a raincoat.

Two Mack Sennett Graduates in Trouble!



The little fellow with the walrus mustache, on the left, who seems to be just another cog in a big machine, of course, is Chester Conklin. The surprised young mechanic on the right, as goes without saying, is Master Charles Spencer Chaplin, as he appears in the stellar role of his latest production, "Modern Times," which, while originally scheduled to open on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater this Friday, will not occupy the silver sheet at that house until Saturday of this week. Chaplin's leading woman in this picture is Paulette Goddard, whom he is expected to marry when they reach Singapore on their present world tour.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan.

Dawn Patrol.

Round hats, pancake hats, hats that perch forward over the left eye, hats that cling to the back of milady's head . . . I've never seen the likes of the hats that the girls are wearing on Broadway and Park avenue at the moment . . . I saw one hat last night at the Waldorf that had an outboard feather in it . . . I saw another one with a cuckoo bird hatching robin's eggs . . . Millinery has gone saucy and impertinent this season, decorating the New York skyline with interesting headgear.

The girls and their odd-looking hats made a beeline for two night clubs Sunday night, Stork Club and Versailles . . . Magnet at the one was the raffling off of five $100 bills, and five cases of liquor . . . Magnet at Versailles was the raffling off of three cash prizes of $250, $150 and $100 . . . Hang up cash prizes like these, distribute raffle tickets to the girls all week and you've won 'em, hook, line and sinker . . . The L-shaped Stork Club was jammed to the window sills . . . Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr., dancing with Lucy Beckham, was one of the braver guys who dared invade the circumscribed dance space . . . Drusilla Strain, with Yale's Don Haggerty leading the tandem, was more fortunate . . . Midge Gaige and Fred Baehler, completing a tasty pivot, almost sat in Miriam Hopkins' lap . . . Frank Buck, who birthdays today, and his pretty Missus, and Dashiell Hammett were wiser, sitting tightly at their tables . . . Hammett's "Thin Man" would have been the ideal dancing partner on that narrow strip of parquet flooring . . . Frank Fay, who was to pluck the winning numbers, sat at a ringside table with Ted Husing.

Idly you watched the odd-hatted gals dance past . . . Janice Jarrett and Harold Meenan, Gloria Hattrick and Gil Haggerty, Marge Logan and Bruce Powell, Ellen Lehman and New Rochelle's Dick Nesbit, Mary Schaff and Austin (Rhumba) Byrne, the Bob Riordans (she was Francine Counihan), Beverly Parker and Dario, Donna Schuyler Beekman and Richard Fried, Jack La Rocque and Laura Walts, Penelope Winslow and Jimmy Stewart . . . There were shrill whispers from the femmes as Frank Fay started drawing the lucky numbers . . . The girls shrieked and giggled nervously at his quips, and their odd hats fluttered in the agitated stillness . . . Barbara Bennett Downey, Jack Curley's daughter; Jean; Mrs. Jerry Brady, Penelope Winslow and Eleanor French won the money prizes, because they were in the room and had the corresponding ticket stub when their names were called . . . Others were not so fortunate . . . One girl's name was called twice, and each time she was disqualified because she had forgotten to bring along her stubs . . . "Honey, you threw an ace-deuce," Fay told her . . . Mabel Boll's name was called, and a boy sitting behind us had her ticket, but it was disqualified because she wasn't there in person . . . Mrs. J. Daniel Fink won the $250 prize at the Versailles, with Mrs. Al Turner and Mort Hamburger getting the other two.

The Syracuse Daily Orange forwards the results of the recent co-ed poll to disprove my jeers: (1) Sullivan, (2) Astaire, (3) Nino Martini, 4) Mickey Mouse, (5) Ray Noble . . . As a result, the co-eds will hold another balloting and the prize winner will make the Stem rounds with me . . . Well, let's see . . . I'll start her off with a visit to the Waldorf-Astoria to hear Orville Knapp's swell band . . . Drop in at the Hollywood, Paradise and French Casino for flying visits . . . Buy her an orangeade at famous "21," and point out the celebs at El Morocco . . . Give her a view of New York at night from the sky-top Rainbow Room . . . And maybe a plate of ravioli at Jimmy Kelly's before calling it a day.

Broadway bandleaders are killing your reporter with kindness . . . The two song hits of the season, "Moon Over Miami" and "Building Up to an Awful Letdown," were taken from this space . . . As a result, every time I walk into a night club, the bands go into one or both of them, and after a while, you begin to feel a trifle self-conscious . . . Teddy Lynch, I think, gets more zing and uh-h-h into "Building Up to an Awful Letdown" than any other warbler on the Dawn Patrol . . . She really sells it.

Notes: Julian Field and Peggy Morrow probably will be married by the time this gets into print . . . He got his final decree Saturday . . . Report Due Today On Elevator Death

Report on the investigation into the automatic elevator accident which caused the death of 14-year-old Harvey Crowell at 7511 Georgia avenue a week ago is expected to be submitted today to Capt. Hugh P. Oram, director of inspection services of the District, by Col. John W. Oehmann, building inspector.

The report is to be made by E. E. Owens and F. H. Signor, elevator inspectors. The former approved the elevator in 1931 as conforming to District regulations. The latter since has inspected it semi-annually.

The regulations limit the space between elevators and shaft doors to not more than 4½ inches. There was 7½ inches between the outer and inner doors of the elevator in which the Crowell boy was killed, Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, coroner, has fixed 11:30 a. m. Friday for an inquest.

Decency Legion Opposes Block Booking Curbs

Organization Sees No Hope of Wholesome Screen by Leegislation.

Declaring there is no hope or promise of a wholesome screen through legislative enactment, the National Legion of Decency yesterday presented a statement before the sub-committee of the House Interstate Commerce Committee opposing the Pettengill bill to surb block booking of motion picture films.

The statement, presented by the Rev. Dr. Joseph A. Daly, of New York, executive secretary of the legion, said:

"The Legion of Decency has placed reliance upon an aroused public opinion in its campaign for clean motion pictures. The results of its campaign are a matter of common knowledge throughout the United States. It is generally acknowledged that under the banner of the Legion of Decency millions of persons throughout the United States have enlisted actively in the campaign to the end that there has been a significant improvement in the moral quality of motion picture entertainment. * * *

Will Continue Campaign.

"It is the intention of the Legion of Decency to continue the campaign on present lines, seeking the active support of all right-minded people and relying upon the influence of public opinion."

The statement includes one authorized by the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures on February 26, and reading:

"The Legion of Decency sees in legislative measures not a means of securing a wholesome screen but rather a grave danger of political censorship. One law may lead to another. The result in all probability will give us a bureaucracy or final court of morals for motion pictures.

"There would be the danger of political appointees interpreting the provisions of the law in a bureaucracy so as to set up moral standards of motion pictures. There would be danger also of these appointees being influenced by political pressure in their interpretation."

Speaks for 22,000,000.

Dr. Daly said he was authorized to speak by the Episcopal committee on motion pictures of the Catholic Church in the United States, a committee which "is alone able to speak authoritatively for the 22,000,000 Catholics in the United States on matters involving the morality of motion pictures and is exclusively authorized to dictate the policies and practices to be followed by the Catholic people of the United States in the campaign for wholesome motion pictures."

The House sub-committee also heard Sidney R. Kent, of the Fox Film Co., say that the objective of the bill to restrict block booking was "to permit the exhibitors to hold block booking by the throat with one hand and pick the cherries they want with the other."

He declared that ending of the booking system would not prevent showing of pictures to which objection was raised by man, continuing:

Kent declared that such productions as "Alice in Wonderland" would never be shown widely if exhibitors were left to ordering them singly, but when supplied in a year's program under contract, he said, these and "other good pictures" are played that otherwise "would never reach the screen on their own."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation presents the Pro Arte String Quartet, of Brussels, at the Library of Congress Tuesday afternoon. Program: Lyrische Suite (Alban Berg), Quartet in G major, K 387 (Mozart), Quartet No. 4 (Bela Bartok).

To one listener at least, yesterday's performance of Alban Berg's "Lyrische Suite" had the feeling of a tribute to the memory of the composer, who died in Vienna on December 24, 1935, in his fifty-first year. The music contains so much metaphysical matter as to lend itself to elegiac purpose, and the fading away of the final "largo desolato" has a definite mood of irreparable loss.

The most zealous of Schoenberg's disciples and the most consistent in devotion to atonalism, Berg tirelessly explored that strange twelve-tone domain where key signatures are dissolved in a mist and the hearer gropes blindly for tangible reality. Apparently he found spiritual satisfaction in that "mystic midregion," for he never departed from it, and his uncompleted opera, "Lulu," carried still further the methods of his most significant work, "Wozzek."

It seems to me indubitable that atonalism is the metaphysics of music. Philisophical music, highly speculative though it may be, retains the vocabulary of tonality and is intelligible to those who understand the language. But the acoustical vagueness of atonalism exactly parallels the shifting values of metaphysical terms; one never knows precisely what the composer means because his phrases admit of several possible interpretations.

After this excursion into the indefinite, the G major quartet of Mozart dissolved the mists with its clear sunniness. The first of the half-dozen quartets dedicated to Haydn, it was written in December of 1782, four months after his marriage. Nearly a decade had elapsed since he had composed in the quartet form, and his resumption of it showed a seriousness in marked contrast with his earlier gallant style. In the G major quartet he entered his musical maturity, and his mastery shows in the subtleties of speech.

Bela Bartok's fourth quartet is what one may call sophisticated barbarism, a deliberate assumption of primitive elements by a keen intellect. The music is savage, even brutal, in its ferocity. But the snarls and growls in the opening allegro do not deceive for a moment; beneath this wolf-skin hides a contemporary thinker. An intense vitality pervades the work, and it is so strongly charged electrical personality that one tingles at the contact.

2,000 Expected to Try Out Today for All-Local Film

Initial Light and Voice Tests Will Be Held for Production of 'Talkie' Sponsored by The Post and Loew's Fox Theater.

Washington's first all-local talking picture will be cast today and production of this film, sponsored by The Post and Loew's Fox Theater, is scheduled to start Saturday. The picture will be shown on the screen of Loew's Fox when completed.

Initial light and voice tests will be held today in the Willard room of the Hotel Willard between 3 and 6 and from 7 to 9 p. m. All registrants who have signed application blanks are requested to attend. Those attending school are asked to report for casting between 3 and 6 p. m. and those who are employed from 7 to 9 in the evening. Each of the local film aspirants who have applied will be given a light and voice test under the supervision of Leonard A. De Menna, director, who arrived here yesterday, and Max Allentucknot casting director. The selections will, be made until everyone has taken the tests.

Because hundreds are still seeking try-outs, it was decided to allow those who desire an opportunity to enter but who have not as yet filled out application blanks to obtain blanks by appearing in person at the Willard room today between the hours designated.

More than 200 parts will be definitely assigned at the casting today and both Mr. De Menna and Mr. Allentuck are in for a busy session with some 2,000 applicants expected to appear for try-outs. There are 10 leading parts, 15 "bit" parts and the balance extra roles. The part of the high school principal, which is the only adult part in the film, was cast to Senator Henry F. Ashurst, of Arizona, and the Senator is now rehearsing his "lines."

"It Happened in Washington" Will have high-school theme and the action includes a fraternity initiation, a ballroom scene, classroom episodes and many other settings. The greater part of these scenes will be filmed at the Hotel Ambassador on Sunday.

Mr. De Menna, director, watched casting yesterday and was greatly impressed with the talent. He said, "Casting the Washington film is going to be quite difficult as there are so many talented and so many excellent types to choose from." Watch The Post daily for further details of this interesting event.

Hollywood

Watching Them Make Pictures.

Hollywood, March 16.

W. C. Fields is an actor that other actors like to watch, and onto the set where he is making the flicker "Poppy" comes Herbert Marshall, who is working at that studio in the picture "Something to Live For." With Marshall is Gloria Swanson. For she has come to watch him work, and now he is taking her to see Bill Fields.

Several chairs are placed near the wagon Fields is supposed to be driving through the circus grounds, and Swanson and Marshall have front row seats for the show. Fields always puts on a show. He doesn't need the celebrity audience. No matter what lines have been written, Bill adnibs. He never remembers lines and never reads the same speech twice.

Director Eddie Sutherland and gag writers Jack Cunningham and Bobby Vernon are on the set. After the "take." Miss Swanson is introducing Vernon and Sutherland to Herbert Marshall.

There is really drama on this set now. For Bobby Vernon, the gag writer, and Gloria Swanson were once co-stars in a series and Vernon got first billing. They reminisce. How they got $150 as a team. How Christie Comedies would sign only Vernon but not Swanson. There was one picture all three played in together, "Danger Girl." In that one, Eddie Sutherland was the heavy. They continue to talk and talk. W. C. Fields' big comment is this: "Funny, how I always get thirsty." He proceeds to quench his thirst.

* * * *

Kay Francis, portraying Florence Nightingale in the flicker of that title, is playing a scene with George Curzon. Miss Francis, standing in her London apartment, tells Curzon that she is going to the Crimean War to serve as a nurse.

Director William Dieterle, wearing a pair of white gloves which have become his trade-mark, rehearses the scene again. Sitting in the director's chair, watching, is a young lady. She is Charlotte Dieterle, wife of the director, and she gets up to hand him a glass of milk.

The scene is being played again when a group of visitors marches on the set. There is much noise. The parade is led by D. W. Griffith and his wife, and others in the party include Anita Louise and Maureen O'Sullivan.

D. W. Griffith, the great director, is visiting the set to see how they make talking pictures.

The first person to speak to him is Cameraman Tony Gaudio, who served as cameraman on many pictures that Griffith made. Then Griffith s introduced to Director Dieterle. Kay Francis comes over to greet him soon, and Griffith says: "I don't want to disturb you. I'll be going. I know what visitors are on a set. I never liked them when I was making a picture."

Griffith and his party start for a projection room. He wants to see the picture, "Dangerous," and witness the performance for which he handed Bette Davis the Academy Award.

And on the set I notice that outside the window of this London apartment in winter geraniums are blossoming. A movie boner in the filming.

* * * *

There is much aloofness and a certain degree of secrecy about the filming of the flicker "Romeo and Juliet." William Shakespeare seems to frighten a studio as well as actors and actresses.

This particular afternoon, Director George Cukor is filming the Capulets' ball. This is the scene where Romeo first meets Juliet. The set is immense and furnished in exquisite taste. I am informed that this huge banquet hall is "the small dining room."

At the ball, Norma Shearer (Juliet) is dancing with Ralph Forbes, who plays Paris. Both Miss Shearer and Mr. Forbes have been taking dancing lessons from Agnes De-Mille, who is staging the dancing. Ralph Forbes, who comes from this State, is very pleased with the many months he has been under contract for this role. "I've had quite a Shakespearean season," he says. Sitting on the set, watching, are the genial Prof. Strunk, from Cornell and his charming wife. They are thoroughly enjoying Hollywood and Shakespeare.

Prof. Strunk, the authority on the Bard of Avon, is there to tell the studio and any one else just what "Romeo and Juliet" is about.

Now take this very scene, the Capulets' ball. Here is what it is really about. Romeo has been carrying the torch for Rosaline. His mob wants to cheer him up and so they get him to crash the Capulets' ball with them. There Romeo sees Juliet and falls like a ton of bricks. Don't let the costumes and the grandeur fool you. It's the same story. Romeo meets Juliet . . . boy meets girl, carrying the torch for Rosalind.

Sonja Henie, Skating Star, Turns Pro

Olympic Champion Will Receive $35,000 for 3-Week Tour.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

NEW YORK, March 17.—Miss Sonja Henie, Norway's captivating queen of the ice, has agreed to turn professional and will make her first appearance in Madison Square Garden this month, the United Press learned today.

The 24-year-old Norwegian girl, who is recognized as the greatest women's figure skater in history, will receive $35,000 for eight appearances in three weeks. Four of the appearances will be made in Madison Square Garden, New York, and the others at the Chicago Stadium and Detroit Olympia, according to present plans.

Move No Surprise.

Her decision came as no surprise as she has threatened to retire annually during the past four years. She gave different reasons—once saying she had lost the thrill for winning, another time pleading that preparations for exhibitions took too much of her time, and on another occasion saying her parents wanted her to settle down to the life of a normal Norwegian girl. She decided suddenly to come to the United States, canceling several European engagements. She arrived Wednesday and immediately started negotiating for a professional contract.

She was met at quarantine by a representative of Madison Square Garden. Then Mike Jacobs, bitter rival of the Garden, moved into the bidding for the Norwegian queen's services. Jacobs offered her $45,000 for exclusive rights to her services for three months, causing the Garden to raise its ante.

Goes to Midwest.

The Garden is understood to have a working agreement with Jim Norris, owner of the Chicago Stadium and Detroit Olympia, making them partners in the presentation of Miss Henie during the duration of her contract. She is scheduled to perform in the Garden on Sunday and Tuesday in an international skating carnival for the benefit of the Bellevue Hospital. Inasmuch as she has agreed to financial terms, these two performances will be as a professional. It will be the first time the Amateur Skating Union ever has sanctioned amateurs and professionals on the same show.

During her amateur days some of Miss Henie's demands for expenses appeared exorbitant to several clubs. D. P. Crulkshank, president of the Minto Skating Club, Ottawa, Canada, refused to book her in February, 1932, when she was on tour in this country because of her demands.

Nats Face Tigers At Orlando Today

Newsom to Start Against World Champions.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 17.—Unbeaten as yet in their spring exhibition games, the Nats tomorrow face their severest test when they meet the Deroit Tigers here.

Against the world champions, who are favored to repeat the pennant triumph of last season, Manager Bucky Harris will send to the mound the three pitchers who figured in the defeat of the Boston Red Sox last week.

Buck Newsom, Ed Linke and Pete Appleton, each of whom will pitch three innings, will work in that order.

Lewis Signs Three-Year Contract With Garden

New York, March 17 (U.P.).—John Henry Lewis, of Phoenix, Ariz., light-heavyweight champion, today signed a contract to fight for Madison Square Garden for the next three years.

Under the new arrangement Lewis, who made his first defense of the title Friday against Jock McAvoy, of England, has agreed to meet any and all opponents chosen for him by the Garden, which has tied the champion up to and including 1938.

Helen Jacobs Speeding.

London, March 17 (A').—Helen Jacobs, American tennis star, failed to appear in Mortlake Police Court today to answer a charge of exceeding the 30-mile speed limit on Barnes street.

With Shirley Povich.

Winter Garden, Fla., March 17.

Mr. Gus H. Fan, Gen'l Delivery,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Gus: Why don't you answer my letters? Maybe they've been going astray, so I won't hold it against you, but if you don't receive this one, please let me know. Better still, wire me if you don't receive it.

What I wanted to say is, Gus, that it'll be downright criminal if this Washington ball club doesn't get some decent pitching this season. Clark Griffith says that outside of the pitching he wouldn't swap his club for any team in the league, and he's got me thinking that way, too.

POVICH.

It's a fact, Gus, there's a swell ball team in the making down here. You point me out a weakness outside of the pitching and I'll point you out a white blackbird. I know that they've been complaining about the catching, but the way Cliff Bolton can powder that pill covers a lot of his backstopping sins, and they have not been so many in recent seasons if you've been noticing.

They think they're good, too, Gus. Every player down here is offering a silent prayer that the pitchers come through. They look over the rest of the club and then say it's a pity that this team doesn't have a sure-fire pitching staff.

Fellows like Jesse Hill and Buddy Lewis and Cecil Travis, in his new position at shortstop, already have the stamp of approval of all the other guys on the club. They vision Hill as a big improvement over Heinie Manush in leftfield and one of 'em even went so far as to say that if Hill hits into a force play every time he goes to bat he'll still be more valuable than Manush, because, once on base, he'll play hob with the opposition. No rookie ever won the admiration and confidence of his teammates any more quickly or completely than young Buddy Lewis, Gus. They're all willing to wager that he's every inch a big leaguer. He'll hit, or this will be a greatly disillusioned ball club, and if he is not a sweet-fielding third baseman, Gus, why the eyes are betraying all of us down here. He's grabbing everything in sight and getting it over to first base in a twinkling.

And they're gaining a new respect for little Bibby Estalella. Every pitcher seems to take delight in bearing down against him in batting practice, but he keeps on knocking the ball back down their throats. And that triple and home run he hit in a couple of exhibition games are no myths, either. Deep down, Gus, they know he's a swell hitter, that he has plenty of nerve or no nerves at all, and that he'll give the pitchers fits if Bucky Harris uses him as a pinch-hitter.

But the big sensation down here, Gus, is Cecil Travis as a shortstop. Here's a guy who was actually wasting his time at third base and in the outfield. Why, he's a standout shortstop. He's all over the place with a pair of hands that are death to base hits and there never was any question about his arm. I don't have to tell you about his hitting, Gus.

This is a socking ball club. I'll reel off the .300 hitters for you, Gus: Jake Powell, Buddy Myer, Johnny Stone, Cecil Travis and Cliff Bolton. And there are other possibilities. Joe Kuhel, you remember, hit .323 in '33 and Hill was only 4 points under .300 last year. And Buddy Lewis was a .320 socker at Chattanooga, if that means anything.

But the pitching, Gus—ah, there's the rub. That's where the club has to be lucky. Earl Whitehill has to stand up for 'em, and Ed Linke has to have a lot of luck with that dead arm of his. Buck Newsom is the only sound veteran on the staff. Jimmy DeShong is as yet untried, but Bucky Harris has to dig up two other pitchers somewhere.

He'll have Monte Weaver, Pete Appleton, Henry Coppola and Dick Lanahan to choose from. If any one of 'em makes good in a big way, that will be the ultimate in Harris' hopes. Weaver, you know, is a distinct gamble and Appleton flopped twice before in the big leagues. Lanahan is still a wild, young southpaw, and, to my way of thinking, young Coppola represents the best possibility. When Coppola is right, Harris has a pitching piece of stuff out there, but the kid has a queer idea that he is afflicted with a sore arm and pitches his best only on the threat of being booted out of the league.

That's the situation, Gus. I just thought I'd write and let you know. Of course, if you not interested, or don't receive this letter, why just tear it up. Yrs. in sport,

Miller, Sarron Movie Rights For Sale

By Bill McCormick.

BROADCASTING and movie rights for Washington's first title boxing bout to be held at Griffith Stadium May 18 between Freddy Miller and Pete Sarron will be placed on the market today.

Sponsors of the contest, which will be held for the benefit of the Metropolitan Police Boys Clubs, expect to realize enough from the sale of these rights almost to offset the $10,000 guarantee which will be paid to Miller for defending his featherweight title.

"We had the sale of broadcasting and moving picture rights in mind when we offered Miller the large guarantee he demanded," one of the sponsors of the bout said yesterday. "If they can be sold—and I am convinced they can be—we will receive a sum that will go a long way toward wiping out the amounts actually being paid the two contestants."

Neither to Benefit.

Neither Miller or Sarron will receive a share of revenue derived from the sale of picture and broadcasting rights under the terms of the contracts they have agreed to. If the fight is filmed, it will mark the first time since the days of Jack Johnson and Jim Jeffries that pictures of a professional boxing bout can legally be shown in the District. Following the Johnson-Jeffries affair, Congress forbade interstate transportation of fight flickers.

Both police headquarters and the ticket offices of Joe Turner, local promoter who will sell tickets for the bout although not actually interested in its promotion, have received many requests for tickets with the bout more than a month away. Turner has requests for at least $250 worth of tickets and similar requests have been received by the Police Department.

Go on Sale Shortly.

The tickets probably will be placed on sale within the next two weeks. Today, efforts will be made to have the date of the high school cadet competitive drill, also scheduled to be held at the stadium May 18, moved back to allow proper preparation of the fight site. As soon as the matter is straightened out, an order will be placed for the printing of the tickets—a process that usually takes about two weeks.

Because the fight is being held strictly for charity, the Government will be asked to waive the usual 10 per cent amusement tax, which will make it possible to scale the tickets at $1, $2, $3 and $5 flat.

Marion Miley, Jean Bauer Triumph

By the United Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 17.—Marion Miley, Kentucky brunette, and Jean Bauer, Providence, R. I., today led the way into the semi-finals of the St. Petersburg Jungle Club invitation golf tournament.

Other semi-finalists are Mrs. Marion Turpie Lake, New York veteran, and Frances Hadfield, Milwaukee.

Miss Hadfield provided the major upset of the day when she defeated Mrs. Mark McGarry, New York, 6 and 5. Miss Miley, tourney medalist, eliminated Katherine Foster, Clearwater, Fla., 5 and 4.

Mrs. Lake defeated Miss Jean Saint, Kansas City, 2 up, and Miss Bauer went to the semi-finals by eliminating Mrs. Ed Kirby, Akron, Ohio, 8 and 7, in a one-sided match.

Eliminates Mrs. Mann.

In first round play, which started early today and finished shortly after noon, favorites generally triumphed, with Mrs. Miley having no trouble eliminating Mrs. Sam Mann, of the host club, 6 and 4, and Miss Bauer snowing under Mrs. R. C. Greenlease, of Kansas City, 7 and 6.

Mrs. Kirby, who was so decisively beaten in the afternoon, scored an upset by putting out Mrs. E. A. Ranny, of Detroit, 3 and 2.

Mrs. Lake shot the best golf of the morning, going out in 38, 3 over par, to whip Mrs. D. T. Pellenz, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, 8 and 7, but Miss Hadfield ended her match quickest when she eliminated Miss Gertrude Ballou, 10 and 8.

Wife of Horseman 'Horns In' on Race; Act Costs Her $50

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, March 17.—It cost Mrs. Leopold Partridge, wife of a well-known art dealer and race horse owner, approximately $50 to "horn in" on the running of the Leicestershire Hunt steeplechase at Melton Mowbray today.

When the riders were on the last lap, Mrs. Partridge rode her bay mare onto the course and joined in. She finished level with the third horse.

Nats Conquer Albany, 9-7, With Rally

Lanahan Wild, Yields 6 Tallies in First Two Innings.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

WINTER GARDEN, Fla., March 17.—Although the sluggers of Albany, Washington's farm, nicked Dick Lanahan, former Capital sandlotter, for 6 runs in the first two innings of today's game here, the Nats managed to rally and win their third straight preseason game, 9 to 7.

Lanahan was relieved on the mound by Joe Bokina, who assumed the pitching duties in the third inning. After allowing a smashing double by Bell and a fluke infield hit, which accounted for the Little Senators' seventh—and last—run, Bokina settled down to serious business and held the International Leaguers under control.

Lanahan may have sealed his fate with the Griffmen by his poor exhibition. He walked four men in the first inning and three in the second before he was yanked. These free trips, combined with a long triple by Welaj, a double off the rightfield fence by Jolly, a couple of infield hits and an error by Buddy Myer accounted for the damage inflicted by Albany.

The Nats themselves got under way in the second inning when Zabela, the Albany hurler, did a bit of free passing himself, issuing ducats to Travis and Stone and allowing them to advance on a wild pitch. A slashing single by Bolton scored Stone after Travis had tallied on a long fly.

The Nats' big punch came in the sixth inning when little Senor Roberto Estalella smacked a home run over rightfield fence while batting for Bokina. Disheartened by the senor's fine example, Zabela, pitching for Albany at the moment, filled the bases by walking Reynolds, Powell and Travis. Reynolds scored when Miles got a fluke single that hit the first-base bag. Fortes replaced Zabela.

Distinct Cuban Hue.

The game was taking on a distinct Cuban hue for pitcher, catcher and batter were Havana sandlot products. Paying no heed to the raucous shouts of his countrymen, little Estalella swung from his heels against one of Zabela's pitches and slammed it out of the lot for a home run, grinning broadly in the direction of the Albany bench as he crossed the plate.

But the Nats were a lucky outfit today. The tying and winning runs in that sixth inning were anointed with all the luck that any ball team can hope for. It was on a wind-blown pop fly by Sammy Holbrook that twisted high in the air and then fell safely between the batter's box and the pitching mound that the Nats tied the score and won the game.

Kuk Hits Two Homers as Atlanta Bows; Cards Nose Out Yanks.

By the United Press.

PENSACOLA, Fla., March 17.—Led by Steve Kuk, rookie outfielder, the New York Giants bombarded four pitchers for 25 hits to score a 27-to-7 victory over Atlanta before less than 50 fans today.

Kuk made four hits, including two home runs, in four trips and batted in five runs.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 17 (U.P.).—The St. Louis Cardinals defeated the New York Yankees, 8 to 7, in the first exhibition game of the Florida Grapefruit League for the Yankees today.

Six errors, two by Red Rolfe, Yankee third baseman, and four hits in five trips by Joe Dimaggio, sensational coast rookie, featured the game.

Clearwater, Fla., March 17 (U.P.).—Manager Casey Stengel of the Brooklyn Dodgers announced today that he was thinking of shaking up his infield. He said he might obtain the release of Infielder John Hudson from Allentown and make him regular shortstop. Hudson, serving as Loney Frey's substitute in the first string infield, has played brilliantly.

Clearwater, Fla., March 17 (A').—Casey Stengel, a great character who likes to have daffy ones around him as long as they play baseball, has a trio of "daffiness boys" in camp this Spring who are bound to spread joy in old Flatbush.

On his Brooklyn club, Casey has a singer who can lull babies and umpires to sleep with his rich tenor voice, an "ugly duckling" who sneers at form, and the only ball player in major league captivity who sports a flowing mustache and a monocle. They are the hits of the Spring camp, the apples of Casey's trained eyes. Bud Hassett, the Manhattan college boy who is expected to hold down first base this year, is called the "boy with a $50,000 voice". Bud came to the Dodgers via Newark and thus made peace in his family.

Oscar Eckhardt, obtained from the Missions, is the "ugly duckling" not because he isn't a handsome fellow but because of his form at the plate and afield.

Oscar, who doesn't go for a lot of this stuff called "form," has been up there three times, but he looked so bad that other managers couldn't use him. He came up with Cleveland as a pitcher and didn't get into a game. He got a chance at Detroit as an outfielder, and again he didn't break into the line-up. The Boston Nationals used him as a pinch-hitter six times and then shipped him to the Missions.

Stanley (Frenchy) Bodagaray, a regular last season, is the sport with the mustache and monocle. "Frenchy" came direct to camp this spring from a movie lot, where he played in two movies, "Shark Island" and "Sutter's Gold." He wore a movie studio mustache. It didn't show up clear enough in the news reels and newspaper shots, so "Frenchy" obligingly let it grow until he couldn't be missed.

Derringer Is Ordered To Pay Wife Alimony

Tampa, Fla., March 17 (A').—Paul Derringer, ace pitcher for the Cincinnati Reds, was ordered by a circuit court today to pay his wife $150 a month temporary alimony. He also was ordered to pay $500 for his wife's attorney fees.

Larry MacPhail, general manager of the baseball team, who appeared with the pitcher at the hearing, said the ball club would not advance the money to the pitcher and that unless the case was settled soon Derringer would be suspended.

Flogger

Hayes, Conqueror of Carnera, Just a Fourth-Rater.

By Jack Miley.

NEW YORK, March 17. — Just when we get one of our goofy sports idols neatly propped up in a corner and figure he can struggle along without our help for a while, some malcontent comes mozying out of nowhere, discovers our hero has feet of clay and proceeds to kick the legs right out from under him. Fighters, footracers, wrestlers, ball players—it makes no differenece whom they are. Once we put that kiss of death upon 'em and turn our backs to perform some other chore, they're pitched right over the precipice!

We hoodooed the Giants right out of a pennant by making a couple of Western trips with them two years in a row. Bill Terry admitted he could find no other cause for his club's nose dives. Hubbell was doing pretty well, the infield was working in perfect unison on those double play balls and his outgardeners weren't dropping any long flies. "It must be Miley," admitted Memphis Willie, "I can see nothing else wrong with the team, no matter how hard I look!"

Glenn Cunningham had a wretched winter, as a result of our rooting. We hexed Discovery right out of the Santa Anita handicap by urging the clients to back him. And look what we did to Jack McAvoy and Danno O'Mahoney. Where are they today? We don't like to brag, but we certainly folded up that New York University football team by hailing the Violet wicket wizards as the finest quintet in the land. And so it goes, ad infinitum.

But our big five-star special upset (to date, we mean; although, naturally we hope to do better as time goes on) was poor old Primo Carnera. There was a grade A catastrophe for you; a shining example of the Miley whammie at its best. Who would have thought that Leroy Haynes, an unknown from out West, would have beaten the running time of both Maxie Baer and Joe Louis in giving Big Bootsie a half-soling in three heats down at Philly last night? It just goes to show you, though, what can happen when your correspondent gets aboard a fellow.

Hoyas Narrow Search for Punter

Coach Hagerty Expecting Little or No Trouble With His Line.

THE search for capable backfield performers, which began with spring football practice ten days ago at Georgetown, has narrowed to a minute sifting of all available talent in another search for a punter to fill the size 12 brogans of Joe Meglen, who will be graduated in June.

Head Coach Jack Hagerty said last night that the line looks good, at least good enough for this stage of the proceedings, and with "Mush" Dubofsky and George Murtagh handling the lads he anticipates no trouble with this department. But the backs, particularly the kickers, constitute a genuine threat to his peace of mind.

Bill Duff, Frank Meglen, Joe's brother, and Hank Gibbons, the latter a product of Central High School, appear to be the best punters on the practice lot at the moment and one may develop into a fairly good booter. But the rub is that all three are fullbacks, and Hagerty is afraid that the best punter may turn out to be the weakest ball-carrier or a poor defensive player.

The majority of last year's backfield squad are striving for berths with teams in other sports and Hagerty optimistically hopes that next autumn will find one of these men will be good enough to qualify for the regular kicking assignment if the rookies fail to deliver. Tommy Keating, Bob Nolan and Moulin fall in this category.

Dave Wichuness, a husky sophomore who absorbs the finer points of play with heartening rapidity, has caught the fancy of the coaches' collective eye and may be a surprise starter in the regular backfield next autumn if he continues to improve.

Tailors 'Freeze' Ball; to Face All-American Players Tonight.

By Dave Herman.

DENVER AUDITORIUM, Denver Colo., March 17.—Rinaldi Tailors, Washington, D. C., challengers for the National A. A. U. Basketball Championship, forged into the third round of the tournament tonight with a sure-fire passing and shooting attack that netted them a thrilling 39-32 victory over the Noblitt Sparks, of Columbus, Ind. The conquest of the rangy 6-footers, three times Indiana State champions, came as an upset, and boosted the chances of the flashy District players in the opinion of some 4,000 spectators.

Hal Kiesel, sensational Rinaldi center, playing in top form, unleashed a withering barrage of field goals, and ran away with high-point honors, scoring no less than 16 points.

So thrilling was the game, and so sternly fought the battle, that the lead changed hands 11 times.

Rinaldi held the whip hand at half time, 20-18, and in the closing chapter played with such speed and deception that the husky Indianans failed to wrest the lead once from the Tailors.

Tipton Returns Fire.

Sadler, roving Sparks forward, shot a goal to knot the count at 20-all shortly after play was resumed in the second half, but Tipton returned the fire, and the Tailors swung into the lead, never to be headed.

Although Kiesel basked in the spotlight with his deadly shooting from 'neath and 'round the hoops, it was little Bobby Lucas, the whirling dervish of Rinaldi, who has the Indianans buffaloed with his assortment of trick passes and clever dribbling. And Lucas, by the way, had something to show in the way of scoring, with four field goals and three free throws for 11 points.

Five minutes before the end of the first half, Carroll Shore, Rinaldi's ace guard, injured his leg, and Sammy Hook replaced him. Although limping a bit, Shore returned, answered the bell for the second period, his leg generously taped. Twice from mid-court Shore fired goals.

The Sparks played much in the fashion of the Eastern professional team, and reminded one of the Palace professionals of Washington. With Waltz, who potted six goals, and Sadler, who cracked out two, the spearheads, the Indianans got along famously for the first 20 minutes, but Rinaldi's weaving, criss-cross, rapid-fire passing attack wore them down.

With 5 minutes to go, Rinaldi led 31-30. Lucas and Kiesel got busy, and the Tailors whirled away at a dizzy pace, simply passing the Indianans crazy. With 2 minutes to go, Rinaldi resorted to the freezing game to the cheers of spectators.

Tomorrow at 11 p. m. (E.S.T.) Rinaldi will face one of the seeded teams, the high-powered Safeway Stores Pigs hope of Denver and rated by many as the quintet to beat in this championship.

With three former All-Americans, Jack McCracken, Pete Leuty and Bob Dowell in their line-up, the Safeway Pigs are favored to win by 10 points.

McAboy to Succeed Harmony as Maryland Boxing Coach

Pupil to Get Job of His Instructor

By Lewis F. Atchison.

THE fortunes of the University of Maryland's 1937 boxing team will be entrusted to young but talented Lyman McAboy, 23-year-old freshman ring coach, The Post has learned from a reliable source close to the president's office.

He will succeed Capt. John W. Harmony, who inaugurated collegiate boxing at the school and elevated it to its present high status, and who is scheduled to leave in June to pursue his Army career at another post. Official announcement of McAboy's appointment, however, probably will be withheld until next year when candidates for the team are summoned for their first workout.

Neither Dr. L. B. Broughton, chairman of the athletic board which must approve the appointment, nor McAboy could be reached last night for statements.

McAboy Won Education.

McAboy's promotion will be another brilliant chapter in the storybook saga of a boy who overcame innumerable obstacles to obtain a college education. His first love was baseball, and boxing was only a means to an end, for it offered a reward in the guise of a partial athletic scholarship.

One of Harmony's most polished products, as his competitive record eloquently attests, McAboy twice was denied the honor of wearing a Southern Conference championship crown by low blows of fate. In 1935 he was ousted from further participation by a broken hand after gaining the final round, and in 1934 his progress to the title was abruptly halted by a bad gash over an eye after he had reached the semi-final round. He fought at 155 pounds, although in dual meets he sometimes met 165-pound opponents.

Although he always has entertained coaching ambitions, McAboy enrolled at Maryland with his hopes of pursuing a big league baseball career after winning wide acclaim by his work on local sandlots. He won the regular third base assignment with Maryland in his sophomore year, and held it until his graduation. He had never had a pair of boxing gloves on until he became a candidate for the Old Line ring team. He proved to be an adept pupil and a ringman of first water.

The youthful prospective coach graduated with a degree in arts and science. During the past winter he coached the first freshmen ring team ever organized at the school, winning two matches and tying one.

GUILDER, hurried into a contending position, rallied nicely when placed to a hard drive in the last five-sixteenths, swung to the outside entering the homestretch, then closing resolutely, was up in the closing strides. DIXIE PRINCESS opened up a commanding lead in the first half mile, saved ground, but tired suddenly after reaching the homestretch. SILENT DON bettered his position steadily and finished with good speed in the closing stages.

SCOTCH QUEEN, racing strongly, was well on the inside of ZULU LAD, came determinedly when entering the homestretch, gained command in the closing furlong and came out slowly approaching the finish. ZULU LAD had good speed while setting the pace, responded gamely when vigorously urged, but could not withstand the winner. DORNOCH raced in his best form and was easily best of the others all during the running.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs; claiming. Purse, $700. For 3-year-olds. Went to post at 3:28. Off at 3:33. Start bad. Won easily; place driving. Winner, Paul B. Codd's ch. g. (3), by Jack High—Startle. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:13.

JACK SNIPE, breaking clear and fast, moved into a clear lead at once; met a strong effort from MIDNIGHT FLYER leaving the backstretch and drew out when mildly urged during the last quarter mile. MIDNIGHT FLYER, aided in closest attendance of the winner, but was held perfectly safe after making a bid leaving the backstretch. KRONA raced well placed and continued gamely to outfinish SYLVIA G. Latter saved ground in the last five-sixteenths, but weakened in the closing drive.

GUMPTION swung around her field when settled in her best stride, responded gamely to punishment after reaching contention, then finished stoutly to get up in the last 20 yards. GREY SHOT, a keen factor early, lost ground at the stretch turn, was straightened out quickly and came determinedly under stout pressure. SIS ROYAL saved a lot of ground at the stretch turn, engaged the leaders, but hung right at the end.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. St. Patrick's Handicap, Class C. Purse, $800. Went to post at 4:48. Off at 4:53½. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Winner, Mrs. Louise Hickman's b. g. SIR QUEST raced stoutly while in near pursuit of the winner, offered a bold challenge when reaching the turn into the homestretch, but was held perfectly safe thereafter. BEVEAU improved his position on the outside, responded to punishment and closed full of run.

SIXTH RACE—One mile; claiming. Purse, $700. For 4-year-olds and upward. Went to post at 5:25. Off at 5:26½. Start poor. Won driving; place same. Winner, G. T. Libby's ch. m. (5), by Pompey—Jezebel. Trained by F. W. Hannon. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:39.

LATE DATE, avoiding crowding at the first turn, but unable to hold the lead, rallied nicely to punishment in the last five-sixteenths and closed full of run. FUSCO, in a jam at the first turn, recovered samely, improved his position gamely, but could not engage the first two in the final test.

Center Jump Favored by Naismith

By Dave Herman.

A Staff Correspondent.

DENVER, Colo., March 17.—Basketball is the game of games, in the opinion of that kindly old gent, Dr. James A. Naismith, of Kansas University.

Here for the national A. A. U. championship, the 74-year-old father and inventor of basketball, said that the game today is a coaches' game, lacking the speed and spectacular phases of play when the object was to take the ball, with the teams playing the whole court, but it is still "the king of sports."

Dr. Naismith does not favor the elimination of the center jump, agreeing with Dr. Phog Allen, veteran coach at Kansas University. "Of course, we scrap over different points on basketball," he said, "but we don't think they should tamper with the present way of tossing up the ball at center."

Likes Present-Day Play.

While he leans toward the early-day style of playing, Dr. Naismith admitted he liked the present-day playing immensely.

"These boys are running wild from mid court," he declared, "knocking them in from unbelievable distances, but we had some good marksmen, too, back in the 90s."

He continued: "All we had in those days were peach baskets. They used arch shots, for backboards didn't come in until seven or eight years later.

"When I hung up my first baskets in the Springfield Y. M. C. A. gym back in 1895, they were attached to the railing below the galleries.

"There were holes and chinks behind the baskets. The youngsters (spectators) would stick a finger or hand through them and deflect the ball. In much the same fashion they would guide shots into the hoop for the players.

Used Wire as Aid.

"To offset this a wire screen was placed behind the baskets, but then home teams soon learned to bend channels in the screening so a ball, hitting the right spot, would run down the line into the basket. Eventually, the rules designated rigid backboards from which the present style is the offspring."

Asked if he thought the winner and runner-up in this tournament would win in the Olympic trials at New York, Dr. Naismith said: "I think the American Olympic tryouts will be won by a team competing in this A. A. U. championship, although my unbeaten Kansas team will have to be reckoned with."

Foe of Delaney For Monday Is Sought

Billy Nichy May Run Out; Dudas or Paster May Fill Vacancy.

THE pugilistic promotorial firm of Turner and Ahearn, Inc., is in somewhat of a dither this morning over the feature bout they are cooking up for Monday night at the Arena, all because they can't find a partner for Al Delaney, young heavyweight.

Turner and Ahearn, too, have Delaney's signature on a contract for an appearance here Monday, and they had a verbal agreement with Billy Nichy, of Pittsburgh, to meet him, but Nichy, meanwhile, has received a more attractive offer from a home-town promoter and may take a run-out powder on the local firm.

Julius Bach, matchmaker for Pittsburgh's Motor Square Garden, is endeavoring to arrange a bout between Nichy and Tony Galento or Ralph Barbara within the next two weeks, and if successful Nichy, of course, will not appear in Washington next Monday.

In the event that Bach is successful, Turner indicated he will import either Steve Dudas or Bob Paster to fight Delaney. Either would be acceptable to Delaney and on paper it looks like a box-office natural. Dudas already holds one decision over the Buffalo boy and Delaney is anxious to atone for that unexpected set-back.

Idle Moments With Grand Slam at Laurel as He Preps for Kentucky Derby

Hugh Miller, Post Staff.

Two Bomar Stable Derby nominees on their 40-minute "cool out" walk, as a stable boy looks on from the window of the stable. Forest Play, in front, is still in the maiden class, but gives promise of improvement. He is followed by Grand Slam.

Grand Slam's watchman. Silver, a shepherd dog, who was trained by the Detroit police department, is ever present at the entrance to the champion's stall.

Bomar Stable Hopes High On Colt

Wintered at Laurel, He Advances in Work; Record Impresses.

WITH Bowie's opening date still a fortnight away, it seems rather early to herald the activities of coming racing stars, but attention can be drawn to one of last year's juvenile champions which hibernated at nearby Laurel during the past winter.

Grand Slam, owned by P. A. Markey and C. B. Bohn, Detroit industrialists, whose entries appear under the nom de course of Bomar Stable, has been the star of the string of 16 head that have occupied the Laurel Park farm following leasing of the properties by the Bomar Stable upon termination of the Maryland racing season last fall.

The chestnut colt, whose name was derived from his sire, Chance Play, following impressive yearling trials at the Keenland Stud, Lexington, Ky., can claim noble heritage on the distaff side also, having been foaled by Jeanne Bowdre, herself a one-time race mare of note who has, in turn, produced Jean Valjean and other good stake horses.

Of the more than 100 nominees for the Kentucky Derby, he is the only one that went into retirement last year with four major stakes to his credit—among which was the principal Blue Grass offering, the Kentucky Jockey Club Stakes. He made it possible for his owners to collect over $68,000 in win monies, a profitable investment from a $5,500 yearling.

Much can be written of his careful handling during this juvenile campaign in which he was trained by Emmet Potts. Potts first raced his charge at Hialeah about a year ago. He finished second in an overnight event and showed enough for Trainer Potts to withdraw his charge from further winter racing.

Nominated for all the principal juvenile events during the 1935 season he was then sent forth after the richer prizes. His most notable race was the Arlington Futurity at Chicago. Virtually left at the post and trailing the field, Grand Slam overtook horses to finish out the 6 furlong route in 1:12 despite a slow track, leaving the place money to Tintagal, he only horse to top him in 2-year-old winnings last year. The latter won the rich Belmont Futurity. In the Arlington Futurity some clockers recorded Grand Slam's last 5½ furlongs in 1:04 2-5s.

A good "doer," as the horsemen say, Grand Slam has wintered in excellent fashion and will come to the races sound. Trainer Potts announces his first appearance under silks will be in the Chesapeake Stakes at Havre de Grace, after which he will be shipped to Churchill Downs for the Derby.

To date, he has enjoyed about eight workouts over the mile training track, going the three-quarters in about 1:25 and galloping out the mile in 1:55. N. Godfrey, a one-time jockey, is the exercise boy seen astride. Most of the riding this year will be done by N. Bryson, contract stable rider, who is now with Assistant Trainer Johnny Kermath, who handles the other division of the stable now racing in Florida.

Potts has the utmost confidence in his charge and feels that Grand Slam will be the horse to beat in the Kentucky Derby. When reminded of Brevity's record mile in the Hialeah Derby, he points to the fact that competition was missing in that event, and this must be admitted.

Grand Slam was one of 11 yearlings acquired at private terms from Breeder Jack O. Keene in Kentucky. Of the 11, 8 have already graced the winner's circle. The others show promise of winning on their 3-year-old form, in fact one of these, Forest Play, is also a nominee for the Kentucky Derby. Success of the Bomar Stable owners with their 1934 yearling choices apparently has confined their purchase to the private market instead of seeking racing stock at the annual public yearling sales.

At this writing a promising juvenile filly named Mary Keene, by Whichone—Jeanne Bowdre, in turn a half sister to Grand Slam, has just finished her first workout under direction of Trainer Potts. Another half dozen youngsters quartered in the same section of the training stable were also bought from the Keeneland Stud.

with Bill Bennings.

Selections at Tropical Park.

Dear Al:

While lack of space keeps me from going into detail, I will report that for a change, Bill Bennings turned the tables on 741 of the contestants who sought to beat him on Monday. The Benningites had a poor day, with only three of the army of those seeking free tickets to Bowie reaching the four class. The daily prize of two day passes goes to W. L. Hogan. He picked Shyno, Epibeau, Vote Boy and Celiba to run up a total mutuel of $39.90. William Clipp, of Charles Town, W. Va. (I was pulling for him) also picked four winners but they totaled just $7.10 less than Hogan's. J. Hughes, a Walter Reed Hospital boy, hopped up in the "four" class but was out of the money due to a $28.60 total. The leaders for the main prizes of two and one badges to the Bowie meeting remain the same. They are V. L. Brown, whose five winners totaled $72.80 and M. L. Morris, who picked a like number of winners at $67.50. Morris, a daily customer, had only one Monday. Due to the fact that some of the Benningites have shown a shy disposition, I will not print the street addresses of contestants in the future. Read the rules, folks, and get the slips in early. Come on, somebody beat that record of five winners.

BILL.

First race—Moane Keala gets a 16-pound shift in the weights from Broad Meadows in this sprint and, as I believe the race lies between the pair, I'm going to take them in the order listed. Old Keb for the show.

Second race—Miss Subway, rigged with light weight, will do a lot of running in this race. She will have Hanford to do the urging. Billie Wise and Balmacan for the place and show.

Third race—Stealth shares top weight with Gay Dog and I predict that they will battle it out for the chief award in this field. Jaber is speedy now and will be hard to chase out of the money.

Fourth race—Cogartown gets a field that he may beat in this. Has shown a lot of stretch punch and should like the route. Joan F. and Fifth race—Moss Gal gets my call here over the fleet Rockwood. I notice the filly has worked well and I respect her on Hialeah racing. Rockwood should be no worse than second. Hatty is a possible surprise.

Sixth race—Tempestuous, with Wall in the saddle, should make no mistakes in this company. Any price will be a good one. Brown Feathers and Plucky Baby for the remainder.

Seventh race—Miss Purray has a fighting chance to take this purse and I shall string along. Nipantuck and Flag Of War to take care of the others.

Eighth race—Ukraine, Drusus and Thruster is the way I prefer them in the day's final. A trio of fit horses.

Dusek, Christy Renew Feud Tomorrow

By George Considine.

PLANS were taking shape last night in Promoter Joe Turner's office to bring the four wrestling Duseks to Washington on a single card within the next three weeks. Rudy, the dean of the royal family of rassle, which includes Ernie, Emil and Joe, recently returned to the mat wars after a lengthy retirement.

When and if the brothers Dusek perform locally, it would be a battle between them and the wrestling industry. According to present arrangements, the card would consist of four feature bouts with each Dusek grappling an outstanding workman.

A general idea of what might be expected in an all-Dusek show will be apparent tomorrow night at the Turner Arena when two of the brothers appear. In the feaure Ernie squares off with Handsome Vic Christy while Joe is slated to match grunts with one Jim Coffield in a struggle limited to 30 minutes.

Bout by Popular Demand.

The Ernie Dusek-Vic Christy return match was brought about by popular demand. Promoter Joe Turner received a petition, which was signed by some 500 fans, who viewed last Thursday's edition of the Dusek-Christy feud. Christy, himself, maintained that Referee Burns' decision against him was unfair in every detail.

The petition, incidentally, not only demanded a return match but also that Referee Burns be relieved of his duties. All of which complicates matters because Dusek objects to Referee Bennah Bortnick and Jim McNamara. Washington's only other rassle arbiter, probably won't be available.

In the semifinal bout of tomorrow night's debauchery, Dean Detton, the husky blond Westerner, who won recognition in the Rocky Mountain Football Conference several years ago, meets scientific Scotty McDougall and Ivan Managoff tangles with Cowboy Tom Jenkins in the opener.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

SECTION 213, the "marriage clause" of the economy act, places a penalty on marriage, and is antagonistic to the principles of civil service, declares Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, Democratic National Committeewoman from Pennsylvania.

BAKER.

"Section 213 is certainly special privilege at its worst," said Mrs. Miller, "for it gives rights to the unmarried woman which are denied to the wives and mothers of the land. Even granting that the purpose was to spread jobs over a greater area, statistics show that less than 3 per cent of women employed in gainful occupations are in the public service throughout the country. Therefore, if all the married woman who are in the Government's employ resigned their jobs, the increase in employment would have been negligible."

Those who saw merit in the section because jobs were scarce took no account, in her opinion, of the small incomes of many husbands and wives, or of persons who might be dependent on them. She saw a parallel between Section 313 and the prohibition law, but characterized Section 213 as a "new and worse kind of prohibition, because it strikes at the fundamental right of every American to choose the type of work he enjoys most, or for which he is best fitted."

"This law places a penalty on marriage," Mrs. Miller emphasized, "and it is a detriment to merit. The whole idea of the civil service is that Government employes should be chosen from those best qualified. Why then, disqualify a woman because she happens to be married? Married women work for the same reasons that men work—to make a living, to educate their children, to take care of feeble and unfortunate dependents—and there is no reason why they should not have the same privileges under the Government, to which they gladly give allegiance, that they have in any other business organization."

Discrimination against women in Italy and Germany began, she pointed out, with legislation like Section 213. The next step, she said, is usually discrimination against workers in general.

"When the women are demanding the repeal of Section 213 they are doing something not only for themselves, but they are doing something which will aid all workers.

"This discrimination against women is one of the most short-sighted policies ever conceived of; it never has worked, and it will never work. It is not only wrong socially, but it is wrong economically, and the quicker this obnoxious Section 213 is repealed, the better off America will be."

Mrs. Miller has just completed an analysis of the operation of Section 213 for the American Federation of Government Employes.

John L. Sprague (F), Procurement Division, Treasury, recently married Miss Mathilda Woods, at Rockville, Md. Sprague is active in the Procurement bowling and baseball leagues, and is studying law at evening classes. The couple have been spending their honeymoon at Miami.

Hospital Guild Anniversary.

This month the Hospital Guild of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing Women's Local, No. 105, National Federation of Federal Employes, begins its tenth year of successful operation.

Officers of this thriving organization include Mignon Miller, president; Gertrude Marlow (C), vice president; Belle Trouland, secretary; Minnie Stevens, treasurer, and the following directors: Maud Miller (C), Anna Davison (C) and Gertrude Schellhorn.

Claude R. Smith, (P), Agriculture, has just obtained a patent on a process for the production of compounds from Bentonite by the use of organic bases.

Made Assistant Chief.

Dr. Harry W. Schoening, chief of the pathological division of the Bureau of Animal Industry, has been appointed assistant chief of that bureau, it has been announced. He will continue as chief of the pathological division, but will devote time also to administrative duties dealing with the general bureau research.

Dr. Schoening, a native of Philadelphia, joined the Animal Industry Bureau in 1907, directly after receiving his V. M. D. degree from the University of Pennsylvania. In 1925 and 1926 he was a member of a Federal commission that studied the foot-and-mouth disease in Europe. He holds a commission as major in the Reserve Corps of the Army Veterinary Corps, and was a second lieutenant in this corps in 1918. He is also a member of numerous scientific societies.

W. H. Horning, forester of the National Park Service, is scheduled to speak Thursday night, March 19, on the subject, "Olympus, Mountain of the Gods," in the Connecting Wing Auditorium, Constitution avenue at Thirteenth street northwest. Slides and motion pictures will be shown. The lecture is sponsored by the National Park Service, and is open to the public.

B. Y. Morrison Speaks.

Benjamin Y. Morrison, in charge of the Division of Plant Introduction and Exploration, Plant Industry, was one of the speakers this week at a dinner party given by Houghton, Mifflin Co., publishers, at the Hotel Roosevelt, in New York, on the occasion of the "christening" of a new garden dictionary.

On the Air Today

MILTON J. CROSS must be having his problems this week, waiting for that millionth tour-taker to show up. As reported a few days ago in this space, the millionth person to take the Radio City tour will be feted within an inch of his life. And that date is expected to be March 23—next Monday.

The date can be pretty well figured as approximately 1,170 persons buy tour tickets daily. Since each person gets a numbered ticket, the millionth will be conspicuous in the Radio City lower lobby as he steps up to the window.

Mr. Cross's problems revolve about his capacity as chief greeter for the lucky ticket purchaser. If he turns out to be from Montana, age 70, deaf and a religious fanatic, Mr. Cross will need have an entirely different program than for a checker-vested, two-fisted drinking, curbstone cowboy from a metropolitan center.

"He," in fact, might turn out to be a lovely old grandmother or a flippant young sophisticated miss. Anyway, Mr. Cross and his committee of Fred Allen, Jack Benny, Ray Knight, Irene Rich and Lucy Monroe (inasmuch as Mr. Benny will be playing a Baltimore theater next week I think we can count him out of the worrying) are a bit up against it on completing the polishing touches of Mr. Million's celebrating.

If you are at all interested, you will hear "Mr. Million" from the Rainbow Room the night he is feted—in a special broadcast in his honor.

Perhaps you remember the yearly stories of the visits of the swallows to the San Juan Capistrano Mission in California. This year N. B. C. microphones will be on hand to help welcome the birds, who annually arrive on St. Joseph's Day to dislodge the swifts who appropriate the swallows' quarters in the winter months. It is one of nature's most fascinating phenomena—the arrival of the swallows on March 19, to the day. Its been going on for 60-odd years.

To be protected, in case the tradition is shattered this particular year, N. B. C. has arranged to have equipment set up for three days—Wednesday through Friday. They're taking no chances. The program from the Mission will be heard from WRC at 12:15—one of those days. But I'll bet on the swallows showing up Thursday (the 19th) as usual.

The traffic bureau of the Oklahoma City police is conducting its own radio amateur hour. The "artists" are not volunteers, however. They do their acts as they "get the gong" as traffic violators. It goes on daily. A poor excuse is the quickest way to be "gonged." . . . The new Sigmund Romberg program, with Lionel Barrymore and little Cora Sue, provided one high spot Monday evening. It was when Cora Sue explains to Barrymore that she "likes good music," with plenty of juvenile emphasis on "good." The very next number was a soprano rendition—in my opinion justifiably termed in this instance a "rendition." It was one of the most unhappy presentations of a soprano number I've ever heard. I wondered what Barrymore would say at its conclusion—but happily enough it was time for the announcer—and Barrymore was spared.

World Business Slackens Pace In New Year

Industrial Output Dips For First Time Since Last July.

New York, March 17.—World industrial production declined moderately during January, according to the monthly report of the National Industrial Conference Board. It was the first decline registered since July, 1935.

Activity was lower in January than at the end of 1935 in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, and in most of the Central American countries. Production increased somewhat in Mexico, Belgium, Australia and in the Scandinavian and South American countries. Little change was noted in the Netherlands. In France curtailed activity was general, except in those industries working on government armament contracts.

The Japanese textile industry has been adversely affected by the recent decline in world prices of cotton, rayon and silk. The statistical position of the wool industry is strong and has brought about considerable improvement in Australian activity. A marked increase in output was reported by the building trade in Belgium. Italian industry, except for those branches engaged in supplying war materials, remained depressed.

In Great Britain the decline in activity was due primarily to a greater-than-seasonal recession in the volume of private and public building, caused by abnormally severe weather. The trend of output in the English capital equipment industries remained upward during January.

The report showed profits of $8,005,700 for the final quarter of 1935, against $7,742,584 in the preceding quarter.

Robert C. Stanley, president, reported that "new sales records were achieved for copper and the platinum metals, as well as for nickel."

Stocks Recover From War Scare Losses; Government Bonds Stronger.

New York, March 17.—Recovery in stocks and bonds was continued and it brought restoration of virtually all the loss of last week. War prospects nevertheless did not quite leave the market's consciousness and trading volume was only about 2,300,000 shares. Government bonds turned strong. May wheat fell ⅛ of a cent to 98⅞ cents a bushel.

Stocks opened with wide gains in certain pivotal industrial issues, including Steel, General Motors, Standard Oil, Harvester and Smelters. The last was a leader though in activity and strength. It gained half a dozen points to sell at a new high price, the best since 1929. Cerro de Pasco climbed 2 points and Nickel was strong. Coppers moved ahead.

Steel recovered virtually all the ground lost on the war scare of last week. Other steels were better, but not boisterously so. Average gains of 1 to 3 points were made in the chemicals, rails, motors, metals, rail equipments, motor accessories and farm implements. Santa Fe, Northern Pacific, Central, Delaware & Hudson, Southern Pacific and Union Pacific headed a railroad stock rally, which nevertheless was far from turbulent.

Tobaccos continued their slow improvement. American Tobacco preferred jumped six points to the highest price on record. Texas Corporation and Atlantic Refining were rivals of Jersey in the oil market. Utilities were an active group, with the Electric Power and American Power issues the favorites. Some of the amusements were active.

Market improvement was nourished largely by the more reassuring nature of the news from the German war talk front, which left more freedom for consideration of home-made reports. Those were mostly favorable. This is the season of heavy run for corporation statements covering operations last year. The gain in earnings has been highly gratifying, and for the most part those corporation managers who venture to predict the future think further improvement will mark this year. Retail sales reports, transportation figures and other direct testimony point to much better earnings for most industries in first quarter of this year than were enjoyed a year ago.

In particular the rising activity in the steel industry is heartening. Not only will the steel companies at long last find themselves able to operate at a profit, but their current high and rising rate of operations (60 per cent) reflects greater activity elsewhere. Part of the gain is purely seasonal, and may be expected to wash out within a few weeks, if the usual pattern be followed, but this year the peak of operations may come later than it frequently does, delay having been caused by the unusually severe winter and the change in motor trade operations.

Until some definite composition of the differences between Germany and the rest of Europe be made, trade news will not exert its full effect on markets. Relief from the tension of a week ago is welcome, but the markets recognize the possibility of a crisis developing from some untoward act at any time.

Foreign exchanges were dull and sterling declined slightly. Money markets were unperturbed by another day of heavy turnover incidental to the collection of income taxes and other Government operations. The mid-March financing is resulting in a heavy reduction in excess bank reserves—probably half a billion at the roundup—but the total remains so huge that much of a cut will have no effect on money rates. Moreover, gold is more likely to come in during the next several weeks than it is to move out, and receipts of the metal add to excess reserves. Another possible reduction could come from heavy borrowing, but although current reports show expansion of loans, both for security and commercial account, much of it must be seasonal.

Ticker Ticks.

Traders had a new stock to deal with this morning with the listing of Byron Jackson (BJC), makers of pumps and oil well tools. The stock has arbitraging possibilities as it is dealt in at Los Angeles and San Francisco. Combined volume on those exchanges yesterday was 1,300 shares, with a closing price of 24½. This morning the stock opened here at 25½. The stock was removed from the curb exchange on January 29, 1934, after only a few trades had been made in the unlisted department. No sales were made in 1933 and 1932 . . . Short interest in Paramount first preferred is supposed to be large . . . Several brokerage houses reported a resumption this morning of foreign buying of stocks . . . Farm implement shares continued to climb, and a railroad president from the West predicted larger crops than a year ago.

Stores Volume $690,319,000 In Two Months

General Sales Highest Since 1931 Despite Severe Weather.

New York, March 17.—The American public spent $690,319,000 for general merchandise in department stores, mail order houses and general and variety stores in the first two months of this year, the highest volume recorded since 1931, according to figures issued yesterday by A. W. Zelomek, economist of the International Statistical Bureau, Inc. This substantial improvement in spending power was made despite the most severe winter weather in several years, Mr. Zelomek pointed out.

During January and February of last year expenditures by the public in the types of stores covered in the survey had amounted to $633,925,000. In the same two months of 1934 the figures were $602,449,000.

Sales in February this year, according to the bureau's index, showed a gain of $34,559,000 over the corresponding period a year ago, or an increase of 10.8 per cent. Mr. Zelomek said that the month's volume was the largest since 1931.

Although the gain in dollar sales was 10.8 per cent, the increase after allowing for the month-to-month changes as well as for the difference in business days, amounted to 6.5 per cent, Mr. Zelomek said. When higher retail prices were considered, he said that the increase would have been lowered to 4.8 per cent.

Remington Offering Twice Subscribed

New York, March 17 (AP).—Remington Rand, Inc., reports that the offering to common stockholders of new 4¼ per cent debentures with common stock purchase warrants attached aggregated approximately twice the $4,250,000 of available debentures.

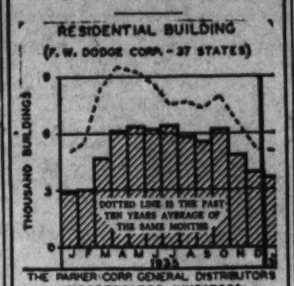
As a result, subscriptions will be necessarily cut. Allotments of the new debentures will be announced within a few days.

Merton A. English On Local Exchange

Merton A. English, vice president of the investment firm of George M. Ferris & Co., has been elected a member of the Washington Stock Exchange.

He is a native of the District and received his education in the local schools, graduating from George Washington University in 1932. At present he is attending National University Law School and will complete his course there this year. English is the second new member to be added to the exchange this year, the other being Bernard J. Nees, of James M. Johnston & Co.

New Homes Increase In Number and Value



Boston, Mass., March 17.—Residential building is on with a good start this year. January contracts awarded were for 27 per cent more homes than in January last year, and with a 67 per cent increase in value. In January, 1933, $7,700 was spent for the average building. This jumped to $10,100 last January.

Wheat Uneven; May Is Lower

Chicago, March 17 (AP).—With European politics talked of as yet potentially full of dynamite, and with dry weather complaints West and Southwest, wheat prices developed firmness today.

After rallying almost a cent from early setbacks, wheat closed uneven, ¼ lower to ⅛ higher compared with yesterday's finish; May 98⅞, July 89⅛ to 89¼; corn ⅛ off to ¼ up, May 60½ to 60⅝, oats at ⅜ decline to ⅛ advance, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 12 cents.

General Foods Plans Rewards For Executives

Proposal Provides That Dividends Must Be Earned First.

New York, March 17.—In its pamphlet report for 1935 issued today, after setting forth earnings previously published, General Foods Corporation announced that stockholders will be asked to approve a "profit incentive plan" for executives charged with major responsibilities. A resolution by the directors says:

"Resolved that a fund be, and the same hereby is, created and established out of the consolidated net profits of the corporation for the year 1936, after deduction of all expenses and reserve for Federal income taxes in an amount approved by counsel and by certified public accountants for the corporation, which fund shall be known as the "Profit Incentive Plan Fund;" the amount of said fund shall be an amount equal to 10 per cent of that portion of the net profits for said year applicable to dividends over and above the sum of $1.80 a share of stock outstanding at the end of the year."

The report says further:

"For many months a committee of directors who are not eligible to share in the plan studied this subject, and reached the conclusion that it is in the best interest of the corporation and of its stockholders to provide for those executive employes charged with the major responsibilities of management some reasonable amount of participation in net earnings above the dividend returns to stockholders.

"In the judgment of the board of directors, the added stimulus of the chance to share in this fund will more than justify its cost through increased earnings for the stockholders."

Bouic Is Named County Counsel In Montgomery

Succeeds Brother-in-Law, Dismissed in Shortage; Tax Audit Delayed.

Albert M. Bouic, outstanding Rockville attorney, yesterday was appointed counsel to the Montgomery Board of County Commissioners.

He succeeds his brother-in-law, Edward Peter, who last Saturday was dismissed after he had been arrested on a charge of embezzling $2,000 in county funds.

Bouic was offered the post at a meeting of the county commissioners last week. He was ill at the time, and there was some doubt as to whether he would accept it. In the interim he agreed to take the job, and his appointment was announced late yesterday.

Like Peter, his brother-in-law, Bouic is a long-time foe of the regular Democratic organization in the county, and helped organize the Fusion Party, made up of disaffected Democrats and Republicans.

The warrant on which former Counsel Peter was arrested charged that he appropriated to his own use a check for $2,000 due the Washington Railway & Electric Co., following the abandonment of its line on Wisconsin avenue from Washington to Rockville.

It was said that nine other vouchers ordered made out by Peter were handled in an irregular manner.

The day before he was dismissed Peter turned over to the county a check for approximately $15,000, which, it was explained, covered all vouchers not accounted for.

Peter will be arraigned in the Montgomery County Police Court Friday for a hearing on the embezzlement charge. He is now at liberty under $10,000 bond.

'Wanted to Kill Self, Not Girl', Hisey Testifies

Linotype Operator on Trial for Slaying Roomer Blames 'Spree.'

Charles Frederick Hisey, 53-year-old linotype operator, on trial for the murder of 26-year-old Virgie Lyttle, a roomer in his Rittenhouse street home, told a jury of 12 men in Justice Daniel O'Donoghue's Criminal Court late yesterday that he intended to kill himself and not the girl whom he shot to death last August 20.

The dapper little typesetter dramatically took the stand in his own defense and related a story of confusion and drunken bewilderment for days before the killing.

"I was not myself," he said in a steady voice, that neither rose nor fell above the hush of the courtroom.

"I wanted to destroy myself with that gun. I wanted to end it all, to get out of the mess I was making of life. I called Virgie to my room to try to get her to persuade my wife to go to work. Then, I thought, I could kill myself and have it over with."

Intention to Kill.

When Defense Attorney Nugent Dodds asked him if he had any intention of killing Miss Lyttle, the linotype operator shifted in his chair.

"No, sir, no, sir," he answered, hastily.

"I couldn't have been capable of such an act. I don't remember much about it, but I never entertained such an idea, or had such a thought."

Hisey restlessly moved his hands, that have set the the type for many murder-trial stories similar to his own.

He told of his battle with liquor, and of the protracted "spree" that preceded the slaying of the girl, whom both he and his wife had befriended and regarded almost as a member of the family.

One drink followed another, day in and day out, until everything became confusion, Hisey recalled dimly. He was undecided what to do.

"I would make up my mind I must stop drinking right away, and then I would try. But I'd start all over again in a little while," Hisey said.

During Four Days.

During the four days before the fatal shooting, Hisey drank seven quarts of whisky and three bottles of gin, the jury was told.

"You see," he explained, "I realized that this could not go on. I could not be humiliating my wife and embarassing her, and having my friends not know where I was.

"So I decided to put myself where I belonged—where I couldn't hurt anybody's feelings with my drinking any more. That's why I bought the gun. I was despondent and I wanted to get things over with."

He then joined the Coast Guard, and won an honorable discharge. Following this he enlisted in the Army, and served several years in the Philippines.

"Were you honorably discharged from this service, too?" his attorney asked.

"Indeed I was, Mr. Dodds," said Hisey with evident pride.

Later he enlisted in the Navy, jumped ship, and went "A. W. O. L." He then re-enlisted in the Army, and when he left the service he came to the Navy Yard here, told his story, and was dishonorably discharged. That ended the possibility of further military service, he admitted.

First Wife Dies.

In 1916 Hisey married. A few months later his first wife died. It was then that he took to the heavy drinking that eventually led him into court, charged with murder.

Once, in St. Louis, Hisey tried to commit suicide, cross-examination brought out. He swallowed a quantity of poison, but recovered.

In 1920 Hisey and his present wife were married and he worked on various newspapers. Nine years ago the couple began buying the house at 414 Rittenhouse street northwest.

In her testimony earlier in the day, Mrs. Hisey, a buyer in a downtown department store, told of the events leading to the tragedy.

On the morning of the slaying, she said evenly, he was "crazy drunk."

"I was up with him all night," she recalled.

"I came downstairs at 6 in the morning, and there I found him finishing another quart bottle of whiskey.

As Notables Viewed the Holy Land Exhibit

The Holy Land exhibit for benefit of Children's Hospital had many distinguished visitors yesterday.

Mrs. Roosevelt and Clergymen Praise 'Holy Land' Exhibition

Gauci Brothers' Model of Historic Scenes, on Display for Benefit of Children's Hospital, Held Instructive and Interesting.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and clergymen representing the several religious faiths in the Capital hailed the Gauci Brothers' Holy Land exhibit at its opening yesterday in the Knights of Pythias Temple, 1012 Ninth street northwest.

Impressed by the elaborate and thorough way in which Josef and Salvadore Gauci had carried through their project, each of the visitors studied the display, noting carefully the hundreds of figures and the realistic setting in which they were placed. They were the first of several hundred Washington residents to view the historic exhibits, which The Washington Post is staging for the benefit of Children's Hospital.

Mrs. Roosevelt interrupted a busy schedule of engagements to view the exhibit yesterday afternoon with a group of boys and girls from Children's Hospital. Enthusiastically she followed Josef Gauci as he conducted the First Lady's party around the "Holy Land," pointing out the historic scenes.

Gauci emphasized features of the exhibit that showed how the people in Jesus' time lived. With lighting effects he showed how that country looks at night. He pointed out the customs in Palestine that persist today—nearly 2,000 years later.

Praised by Clerics.

The clergymen commended the display for its educational value, as well as its interest. In the group were the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington; Canon Raymond L. Wolven, of Washington Cathedral; Rabbi Abram Simon, of Washington Hebrew Temple; the Rev. Edward Arbez, of the Catholic University, who represented the Rt. Rev. Patrick McCormick, acting rector, and the Rev. W. L. Darby, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches.

"I think it is a most outstanding exhibit," said Bishop Freeman, "It is altogether worthy from the educational standpoint of the attention of everyone."

Father Arbez said he didn't expect to see anything so elaborate. "I have seen large-scale maps of Palestine," he said, "and from what I read beforehand about the exhibit, I thought this would be something similar. But it wasn't. I certainly was surprised to see not only the topography of the land worked out, but also the life that went on there. I was most impressed."

"I found the exhibit most worth while," Rabbi Simon said, "it is educational, because of its detail, and interesting because of the life it gives the country."

Dr. Darby said: "It is a marvelous production—I don't know how else to describe it. Certainly churchmen of all fajths should know about it, because all can study it with profit, I want to commend The Post for bringing this fine exhibit here."

Canon Wolven said he thought "the development of the topography of the landscape most remarkable, and the mechanics by which those hundreds of figures on the countryside actually move fascinated me. I have already told several parents they must take their children to see the exhibit."

Mrs. Howard Pays Visit.

"Not only children, but also grownups will want to see the Holy Land as the Gauci brothers have reproduced it," said Mrs. Herbert Seymour Howard, treasurer of the Ladies' Board of Children's Hospital, who also viewed the exhibit yesterday.

"Each one of the 2,000 figures is so remarkably well done that I wanted to stop and look at them all. There is a characterization in every figure. And the lighting effects and all are almost unbelievable."

The exhibit will be open daily from 11 a. m. week days until 5:30 p. m., and from 7 to 11 p. m.. Because of the length of time required to view the exhibition, no tickets will be sold after 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon or after 9:30 o'clock at night. On Sundays the doors will open at 1 p. m.

Admission is 15 cents for children, 11 years old and under, and 25 cents for adults. All proceeds go to the Children's Hospital.

Hazen Addresses Maryland Alumni

District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen revealed yesterday that he still has a soft spot in his heart for the University of Maryland, from which he was graduated in 1888, and for members of succeeding graduating classes.

In an informal talk at a luncheon of the Terrapin Club of University of Maryland alumni, the Commissioner recalled some of the pranks of his collegiate days. He played on the university baseball team—the first team of which the university has a record.

Brahany Luncheon Speaker Tomorrow

Thomas W. Brahany will be the speaker at the annual St. Patrick's luncheon of the Cosmopolitan Club tomorrow at 12:30 at the Carlton Hotel.

Following the luncheon Lawrence E. Rubel, governor of the Federation of Cosmopolitan Clubs of the Capital District, will preside at the semiannual meeting of the federation.

The meeting will be attended by the lieutenant governor, H. I. Teagle, of Norfolk; the treasurer, J. T. Lewis, of Richmond, and the secretary, Michael D. Schaefer, of Washington.

Army Training Debate Delays Supply Bill Vote

Senate Defers Action Until Today in Dispute Over School Courses.

By the Associated Press.

The Senate yesterday involved itself in an indecisive debate over compulsory military training that deferred until today a final vote on the $611,000,000 Army supply bill.

Senator Frazier (Republican), of North Dakota, started a long wrangle with an amendment to prohibit any Reserves Officers' Training Corps funds in the bill going to colleges and schools having compulsory military training courses. A vote on this will be the first order today.

Frazier contended such courses should be elective and complained students in several institutions had been expelled for not taking military training.

Senator Bone (Democrat), of Washington, in a similar argument, made a vigorous attack on what he called a War Department manual issued in 1928 for use in military schools. He said it declared "public ownership of power is very bad" and gave false ideas of "democracy."

"What right has the chief of staff of the Army to promote the interest of the private power trust?" he demanded. "What's that got to do with military training?"

Calls for Repudiation.

Opposing the Frazier amendment, Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, in charge of the bill, said there was a "well organized movement to make attacks on the citizen soldiers, the National Guard and R. O. T. C." by "subversive" elements which realize that "revolutions always start in colleges."

Senator Austin (Republican), Vermont, also opposed the amendment, declaring no State could abandon the teaching of military tactics in land grant colleges without violating conditions of the Federal grant.

Senator Benson (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, making his first appearance in debate, said some land grant colleges had been laboring under the assumption that they have to make military training compulsory in order to get Federal funds, but insisted that was not the case. He also complained Federal officers had tried to make the colleges adopt compulsory systems.

Would "Spread" Profits.

Meanwhile, legislation to permit naval builders to offset large profits on some contracts with losses on others, instead of being limited to a 10 per cent profit on each contract, was advocated by a Navy spokesman and opposed by Senator Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania.

Rear Admiral E. S. Land, chief of the Navy's Bureau of Construction and Repair, told a Senate Naval Committee the result is the builders sometimes take a loss on certain ships and are unable to recover on subsequent contracts.
